Mr. Conkling theron set himself to work to defeat the renomination of his quondam admirer. In this he was aided by President Arthur, his warm personal friend, who threw into the scale the thousand and one influences of the Federal patronage, and furnished from his own cabinet the rival candidate. This was Charles J. Folger, Sceretary of the Treasury, a gentleman of the highest character and a lawyer of distinguished ability, who prior to his entering the Treasury Department had been Chief Justice of the State. While the Half-Breeds had the highest respect for Secretary: Folger, they resented his being thrust upon them by the Federal administration and worked all the harder for Cornell.
