The technical position of the list is better than it was thirty days ago, owing to elimination of weak holders and the resumption of odd lot purchases. The President of Sloss-Sheffield thinks that iron prices are close to lowest levels to be reached, and similar conditions seem to exist in copper, silver and lead. Some Steel prices have reached a level at which good buying will be forthcoming, but the tariff adjustment will probably be an influence tending to lower prices of rails and some other products which have not as yet been cut lower. The report of more activity by United States Steel mills logically follows the new business secured, and in addition to this there are reports that Westing. The chief says that those who have control over the expenditure do not seem to warm up very enthusiastically to such suggestions as these.

"Why," said one of the officers, "this case affords the best illustration of the policy pursued in this department. When we were sending out descriptions of the supposed Kinrade murdeer we got many replies from places that had picked up suspects. In no case were we called upon to pay the telephone or telegraph bill. If we arrest anyone for outside here the other end must consent to pay the bill before the message is sent."

Police Magistrate Jelfs holds a moderate view on what the public call the tramp nuisance. To a Times reporter he stated that in his mind a tramp was a man who lived by begging. Mixed with this class was the worker who had been thrown out of work and compelled to beg. "Begging isn't a crine," he said. He stated that the men who would work but could get nothing to do were not to be called tramps and toughs. They might beg from door to door, but people did not need to fear them, as all they wanted was a meal or the price of their night's bed. Opposed to this class is the impudent beggar, the regular tramp, able-bodied and fit to work, but who was meal or the price of their night's bed. Opposed to this class is the impudent beggar, the regular tramp, able-bodied and fit to work, but who refuses to do so, and lives by what he can get from charitable people. Magistrate Jelfs, had two men before him in court the other day. One was proven to be a regular tramp and beggar, and even had a list of places to visit for help. The other was a man who had nothing but a hard luck story and begged whenever he felt the pinch of hunger or the want of a bed. He had tried to get work, and had promise of a job, but he had to live three or four weeks before he could get a start. The first got six months and the second was at once released. It was after this that His Worship made known his views on the tramp evil. He said he would do his duty to the limit in the case of men who can't work he would also do his duty, which he considered to be to give the men a chance.

Major Campbell is most popular, and there is a general feeling among the citizens and soldiers that General Cotton is making a mountain out of a mole-hill.
