Divorced Life

Helen Hanson Fugate

A Man With a Conscience.

The Longacre Building is a hive of theatrical offices. Marian stopped at the door of Luring & Co., the musical comedy producers, entered and asked for the manager.

"What you want to see him about?" demanded a squint-eyed youth at the closed gate.

"About work," answered Marian. "Aw, you want to see the bookin' agent. You'll have to wait your turn. There's half a dozen hams waitin' to see him now."

Marian dropped into a chair, and began studying the waiting men and women. One was a pale, weary, shabby, washed-out shadow of a girl, who had climbed stairs to booking offices until her boots were all but wrecks. Another, a tall blonde, with flaming cheeks and impatient eyes, kept darting glances brimming with impatience at the locked gate. A fat, pensive, slovenly brunette was a third rival for an engagement. The waiting men ranged from flashy, hand-me-down-apparelled youths, to wasted old-young men, whose thespian careers seemed to have yielded them anything but satisfactory returns.

"Well," said the booking agent more than an hour later, when Marian had at last been admitted, "what's your line?"

Marian answered the crisp inquiry with a truthful statement of her experiences. The other regarded her with pleasant, honest, sympathetic eyes. His genuine dignity and quiet manner were utterly unlike the breezy Ratgenhauer.

"My advice to you is to stay out of the fame," he said in reply. "Keep as far from the stage as you can. If you haven't got a home, stick to it. If you look like too fine a girl to go into musical comedy, the chances to make a hit in this game are about one in ten thousand. The chances of a good girl getting spoiled in this life are overwhelming. I'm talking to you in this way because you're different from the usual run of women who come looking for work. It's too late to talk like this to most of them. It wouldn't do any good. My honest advice to you is to get over the notion of going on with theatrical work before it is too late."

"I appreciate your interest in me," said Marian, "but I've made up my mind. I have to do something. Can you put me on?"

"If you could make any sort of a stab at singing," answered the gent, "I think I could use you in the charus. It's easy enough to get singers, but we've got to have good lookers. As far as looks go, you'd qualify."

"Then you'll take me?" asked Mar-an eagerly, pleased with the compliment.

The booking agent shook his head deliberately. "No, I wouldn't take you on. It wouldn't be right. Some other agent might. But I won't. Conscience is not a very abundant commodity in this business, but I've got a little of mine left, thank Heaven. Some day you'll remember what I've told you, and you'll feel grateful to me."

Marian saw that it was hopeless to plead her cause further. She thanked the other for the interview and left. It was on the afternoon of her arrival in New York. Disheartened at her first rebuff and mindful of the little money she had left, she hurried back to her hotel. Of one thing she was certain. She would have to give up her two-dollar-a-day room at the hotel and seek cheaper quarters.

She shrank from the thought of going to another boarding house to live. But she had heard of theatrical boarding houses in the big town, where the luckless may live for a few groats a week. The color and atmosphere which she divined these abodes embodied must be attractive and interesting, she concluded, and made up her mind to investigate the rooming houses of the Rialto.

Big Pictures at the Crescent.

Lovers of motion pictures were accorded a treat last night at the Crescent Picture Palace when the two-reel drama "Red Margaret the Moon-shine" was presented. This clever production was a surprisingly good drama and was followed by two good comedies. Miss Arhady is singing an illustrated novelty song, and the orchestra is as big attraction in itself. To-day the same programme is repeated. On Monday the feature is "The Dread Inheritance," a drama in two reels. Coming: "Robinson Crusoe" in three reels. Particulars later.

LONDON, June 26.

William O'Brien, in a letter to the Morning Post, addresses an earnest warning to British politicians, Liberals or Unionists, who think they see any compromise under the Amending Bill, or any hope of peace. He says the Amending Bill starts hopelessly on the wrong track, and kills Home Rule under the perfidious pretence of enacting it. Even Pitt's Act of Union left Ireland as a sacred entity, around which centred unconquerable hopes. It remained for a Home Rule Government to rend her by Statute into two separate Irelands. He affirms that any compromise to which the Bill is susceptible will be viewed by the Irish with detestation, no less infaceable than that with which France thinks of Alsace, or with which Englishmen would receive a proposal, under German dreadnoughts, to cede Kent and Sussex. He says that a peace conference, though a desperate remedy, is the only escape from a still more desperate calamity. Let the House of Lords instead of consummating the partition of Ireland through the Bill, propose an all-party convention, and four consideration of the Home Rule Bill and repealing Bill for three months, pending report from such conference. Editorially the Post disagrees with the suggestion, declaring that the Unionists cannot consider any compromise with a policy striking both directly and indirectly at the United Kingdom. There would be no settlement until the issues were submitted to the judgment of the people.

MEXICO CITY, June 26.

The Mexican Senate is to meet tomorrow to hear the Executive's report on the outcome of the mediation conferences at Niagara Falls. Optimism prevails generally. The inhabitants of the capital are planning a big demonstration in honor of the South American mediators. Prominent politicians express the belief that peace will be restored in Mexico before long.

KIEL, June 26.

The German Emperor visited the British flagship of the second battle squadron, the King George V, on which his flag as Admiral of the Fleet was hoisted. The Emperor remained an hour aboard the flagship, during which time he was pennally in supreme command of the British fleet. On leaving he was saluted with the Admiral's 21 bells, instead of the Ruler's 23.

WASHINGTON, June 26.
