LONDON, TUESDAY, MARCH 15.

Laurier's Address.

The debate on the address opened yesterday at Ottawa with aggressive speeches by the two leaders. Mr. Borden professed to draw great comfort from the bye-elections. He wanted to know why changes were made in the Grand Trunk Pacific contract, and ference in the speech from the throne to the tariff question, the autonomy of the Territories, the fast Atlantic service, the annexation of Newfoundland and the joint high commission.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in his reply, indulged in some good-humored but efthe Opposition candidates discarded the word "Conservative" and called themselves "protectionists." "We know," said the Premier, "that in marine matters it sometimes happens that when a craft has been upon the sea for years and has become disabled, leaky and discredited, in order to impose upon the public she it put into dry-dock, treated to a new coat of paint, the old name erased, a new name put on, and then launched upon a new career of tinued the Premier, in Quebec had treal. been treated in this fashion. "The gallant gentleman who had been put in charge of the ship under very painful circumstances, and who with great courage had taken hold of the helm, was set aside, and the old hull, without a captain on board, but commanded from the shore by 'a 'junta,' was launched and started on Touching matters of public policy, not finance the enterprise if the Gov-States for commercial favors, and from train to steamer, and steamer to A puff, a frill, a bit of lace, the initiative must come from the other side if the joint high commission was to be reconvened. Defining his posimaking power Sir Wilfrid reiterated that it did not follow that Canada asked the power to negotiate treaties without reference to the Imperial authorities. She merely wanted the right to initiate negotiations and be responsible for them. The Premier concluded with a reference to the tariff, and challenged the Opposition to deny that its policy of adequate protection implied the adoption of the American tariff. He added in these trenchant phrases:

"Was it at the present moment when the people of the United States where endeavoring to free themselvs from the shackles coiled around tion of the American tariff, that they would be so foolish and criminal as to follow the example of the high' protectionists? Factories were being closed in the United States and wages men were asked to be so unmindful of their own interests as to adopt the American tariff. No, sir, we shall continue as we are, and, to use a good Canadian phrase, we shall 'paddle our own canoe.' (Cheers.) We shall continue the policy we have advoourselves as we have commenced; we shall continue the policy of resolute common sense, of calm moderation, which has done so much for the Canadian people, for their fair fame, and for their general prosperity." (Loud ministerial cheers.)
