GOOD WORD FOR THE MUCH DESPISED HYENA

A traveler recently returned from Africa has a good word to say for the generally despised hyena, whose courage he declares is much greater than is supposed generally.

"Hyenas," said the traveler, "do not hesitate, when hunting in packs, to attack lions, even though the lions are in considerable numbers; and in such encounters the hyenas often get the best of it. The lion is a good deal of a bluffer. He looks so fierce and roars so loudly that he gets a greater reputation for courage than is rightfully

Dr. Donaldson Smith, a well-known African explorer, in his account of his journey to Lake Rudolph, tells stories of lion hunting which corroborate the traveler's reports of the relative merits of the hyena and the lion. On one occasion, when camping in the midst of a lion-infested country, Dr. Smith and his followers built a zareba, which is a little inclosure of brush or such other material as comes to hand.

They made ready to spend the night watchfully, for they knew that lions were all about them.

the bushes with which the zereba had been filled, and saw three lions prowling about. When they saw the doctor they slunk off into the brush. But when night came down the lions roared, bringing a number of other lions to sniff about the zereba so close that Dr. Smith, lying flat on the ground, with his rifle inside the inclosure, and watching for an opportunity to get a shot, could feel the breath of the growling animals.

Just when it seemed as if the pack of lions were about to charge the zereba, their attention was diverted by an attack upon them by a number of hyenas, which came growling and baying over the fence.

The hyenas attacked the lions with great fury and bravery. In the excitement of the fight the ordinary howl of the hyena changed to a deep, loud roar which Dr. Smith declares to be nearly equal in strength to the roar of the lion.

The natives told the explorer that it was no uncommon thing for the hyenas to attack the lions, and that as a rule the hyenas got the better of the encounter.

Lions in the Lake Rudolph region of Somaliland, according to the reports of explorers, are accustomed to hunt in packs—probably for protection against

At one village in which Dr. Smith stopped he was told of a pack of six lions which hunted around that locality. They frequently rushed the village and dragged away the cattle. The natives regarded the fact of a pack of hyenas being in the neighborhood as an assurance of safety from the lions, for the hyenas go man-hunting, and the lions go lion-hunting, and the man escapes.

Some people say that the lion's roar is most thrilling when the animal is in the middle of a mane. I have never seen a lion with a mane so big some declare that this is not so. They say that there is nothing so magnificently awe-inspiring as the roar of a maddened lion — one for instance who has been hit by the hunter, but not killed.

In spite of his roar, however, there are those who venture to call in question the lion's courage, though the matter will probably always be one for discussion. It is probable that among lions it is the same as among people—some are brave and some are not. But whatever may be thought of the lion, the hyena gets a better reputation, the more he is known and his habits understood.—Washington Post.

Capture of Lassa.

Since Alexander of Macedon broke into Asia and found it, as the angry King of Epirus afterward said, "the women's apartment" of the world, there has been no expedition so picturesque, so daring, or so unexpectedly free, up to the present time, from loss as this invasion of Tibet. It is more like the adventure which children love as "Jack and the Beanstalk" than any ever recorded by grave writers.

He has never met a keener man than Messrs. Yv and a West African trader who had intimate business relations with a native magnate. "His business methods were excellent and up-to-date, his correspondence was always couched in the most polite English, and looking at the handwriting one would have imagined he was a hard-headed, unromantic merchant who had never left his Liverpool or London office." The Glasgow Daily News writes that, at least, on the Legislative Council, he did not.
