WANT SAME COMFORT AS WHITE PEOPLE GET

Negroes do Protest to Railways Against Discrimination.
 [Canadian Press.]
 New York, April 17.—Dr. Booker T. Washington, principal of the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute, has issued a call to the negro people of the United States, asking them to set aside Sunday, June 7, and Monday, June 8, as special days on which to protest to railroads against discrimination on account of color in the matter of providing passenger accommodations.

JUDGE INSTRUCTS JURORS TO HEED NOTHING BUT EVIDENCE

Tells Them That Duty to Country, Crown and Prisoner Demands Passing of Accurate and Conscientious Judgment.

"Remember that the accused is innocent until proven guilty," said Mr. Justice Kelly, addressing the jury in the Riley case yesterday afternoon. "It often happens that when a person is charged with a crime, the charge is not a personal one. It is a matter of the county on one side and the accused on the other. The law must be enforced. Society must be protected. Thomas M. Riley stands accused on the charge of killing George Blackburn. What is murder? Broadly, it is the killing of a human being. Then there is homicide, which amounts to murder, and is of two kinds. It is either justifiable or excusable. In that case homicide does not amount to murder or manslaughter."

When Killing is Excusable.
 "If you or I accidentally kill a person, it is homicide, but excusable. It means that every man is entitled to use means of protecting himself. If you honestly believe you are about to be killed, you are allowed to defend yourself up to a certain point. It is also justifiable if an officer in the discharge of his duties kills a person who offers resistance. And it is justifiable if death is caused in order to prevent crime. Culpable homicide is in killing anyone by a lawful act."

"By virtue of your office you are here to hear the evidence and pass judgment. You are not concerned with anything except the evidence. Nor are you to be affected by reports or prejudices. Yours is a stern duty. You are part of the walls of administration in the province as I am. It is your duty to country, Crown and prisoner that you pass accurate and conscientious judgment in this matter. Personal feelings should not find a place in making the sentence. It is your duty as jurors to bring in a true verdict."

Crown Lawyers.
 "One would almost imagine that my learned friends were looking at some moving picture show, and enjoying it, to see them smiling and trifling with the prisoner and the witnesses in the box," declared Edmund Meredith, opening his plea to the jury for the life of his client. "They seem to forget that the verdict you render may consign him to the scaffold."

"One and each of you have got to say for yourselves whether you consign this unfortunate man to the gallows or not. This man is made in the image of the Saviour, and yet, if you do as my worthy friends would wish, you will take his life away. To weigh the evidence carefully is the duty imposed on each of you, and I ask each one of you to acquit the prisoner entirely."

Ask For Unprejudiced Treatment.
 "You have the right to say on this indictment that the accused is guilty of manslaughter, for which the maximum sentence is life. Then why ask this man's blood on the evidence that has been produced here today? This unfortunate man is an American citizen, coming to this country as he had every right to do, with a view to bettering himself. You all know that a Canadian, an Englishman, or a man of any other nationality tried on a similar charge in the United States would be tried fairly, honestly and justly, and there ought to be no prejudice against the prisoner because he is an American citizen. He should meet with the same fairness and justice in this court."

Roasts Crown Prosecutor.
 "Here is this unfortunate man, 2,000 miles away from home, being tried for his life, and he puts in the witness-box two men, one a high railway official, and the other a merchant, who will take his life away. To weigh the evidence carefully is the duty imposed on each of you, and I ask each one of you to acquit the prisoner entirely."

Picture of Last Day.
 "We have the unfortunate mother and the unfortunate wife here. If the death penalty is imposed, what a curse, that they should be made to bear the sorrow. The prisoner is in the cells, condemned to the gallows. The mother and wife enter the cells for the last time to see him. He cries, 'Wife, draw the curtain by, that I may view once more before die, the setting sun. And then that last hanging.'"

Curse of Liquor.
 "The real trouble in this case was the accused liquor. There would have been no trouble at all were it not for the amount of liquor that the prisoner had been drinking. The law permits them to sell this poison, permits them to do away with man's brains, and this very hotel must have been selling him liquor when he was in no state to be given it. God, knows the ramifications that liquor will take with a man, and God knows, when that liquor is doctored, what may happen."

"The law says that if a man is so filled with liquor as to be incapable of intent, you cannot find him guilty of murder, for murder is killing with intent. If you find so, and I cannot see on the evidence what other finding you can have, the utmost you can do is to find him guilty of manslaughter."

"We have here that this man was doing no unlawful act in this hotel. We have it from the witnesses for the crown, as well as those for the defence. When he is told to go, he walks quietly towards the door. Blackburn, we are told, took him by the shoulder. Why should he put his hand upon his shoulder unless he intended to do more. When he is putting him out in the dark, this man remembers what happened to him before."

Not Murder, But Manslaughter.
 "The law says when a man is assaulted, as this man was assaulted, that, when in the heat of passion, he does an act of this kind, it is not murder, but manslaughter. We have here, from beginning to end, the aggravation of the bartender. The prisoner says he did nothing aggravating. He dropped a little beer on him. He apologized, and Blackburn refused to accept the apology. Then what did he do? What more could he do? Then he went away, and came back, walking quietly up to the bar and asking for liquor? What is done to him? Why, the very moment he enters, lawfully mind you, this hotel, he was struck and staggered with one blow. According to the evidence of all these witnesses the bartender knocked him down on the floor and struck him several times on the chest, and then threw him out. What do you think of that? Is that provocation?"

Crazed With Liquor.
 "My learned friend will say that the fatal shot did not go off for a half-hour after that. But remember this unfortunate man was crazed with liquor. At 7 o'clock he goes peacefully up to the bar. The bartender says 'Here's that guy again.' The man says nothing, remember, nothing. Then why does this man try to force him out by putting his hand on his shoulder? This man had been devotedly beaten before, and as he said on oath, 'I thought he was going to kill me.'"

"He pulled out the pistol, I don't know how, and fired. Is there any doubt that in such a drunken brawl the pistol might have gone off accidentally? No! And the witness does not know how he did it. There is no single witness who saw him fire that pistol. You take and draw it out in the drunken condition the prisoner was in, and can you have any doubt that the man did not intend to shoot? There is the corroborated hallway scuffle, as the prisoner has told you that he was knocked down there and kicked in the head. I ask you in all fairness, looking you, by any possible means, to find that side of the case alone, come to the conclusion that this man is guilty of murder."

Culprit of No Crime.
 "This man is not guilty of any crime at all, and in all justice I ask you to free him from that dock today. If he was attacked he has a right, if he thinks his life is endangered, to defend himself. The witness has told you that Blackburn said 'I'll kill you.' Then this man really had a right to fire the pistol. If he fired the pistol intentionally, which he swears he did not, then you should say he is not guilty."

Was Defending Himself.
 "On this evidence you are justified in coming to the conclusion that he was defending himself from a brutal beating and was justified in believing that the man would kill him. Your verdict then must be one of acquittal. In order to bring home a case of murder, there must be intent, and my learned friend will tell you that after you have heard the evidence, the law infers intent. But he has a right to defend himself, and the law reduces that offence to the offence of manslaughter. If you find that through drinking this man was unable to understand what he did, then your verdict should be manslaughter."

Plea for Family.
 "There is the mother, and there is the young wife, awaiting you here. Remember, we are all frail, all human. Remember the contradictions of the witnesses in the box. Remember that mercy is a quality of the highest kind. Be merciful. Remember the awful responsibility that rests with each one of you, that after you have heard the evidence, you will want to say, 'We have a clear conscience that, beyond peradventure, I did not consign my fellow man to the gallows.' Remember that all through the length and breadth of this land there is a strong feeling against hanging. In the States the practice has been discontinued, and there is a bill in the House now to do away with all hanging."

"I cannot understand how anyone could say: 'I'm going to take the life of a human being, and sentence him to be hung. I am only a human being myself. The divine law never intended that one man should consign his fellow man to the scaffold.'"

SAGE TEA KEEPS YOUR HAIR DARK
 When Mixed With Sulphur It Brings Back Its Lustre and Abundance.

Gray hair, however handsome, denotes advancing age. We all know the advantages of a youthful appearance. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray and looks dry, wispy and scraggly, just a few applications of Sage Tea and Sulphur restores its appearance. Don't stay gray! Look young! Either prepare the tonic at home or get from any drug store a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Restorer." Thousands of folks recommend this ready-to-use preparation because it darkens the hair beautifully, and removes dandruff, stops scalp itching and falling hair; besides, it can possibly tell, as it darkens so naturally and evenly. You moisten a sponge or soft brush with it, draw this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two its natural color is restored and it becomes thick, glossy and lustrous, and you appear years younger. For sale by W. T. Strong, London.

farewell! 'Farewell! Farewell! O, God-farewell-forever! There is the dismal day and night death watch. A rap at the door is heard, and a brutal executioner enters and he is taken to his execution. Even upon the scaffold they watch him. The trap door is gone—and all of this poor man, Riley, is gone!

Pleas for Analysis.
 "But God forbid that you should return such a verdict upon any flimsy evidence. Before you impose a death sentence, the evidence should be as clear as the noon day sun. Before I should come to such a conclusion I would sit still until I rotted. I urge you to analyze the evidence."

"Is the evidence of men who bum around hotels unsatisfactory or good evidence? We proved that Riley was brutally attacked, struck, and knocked down. Liquor makes a man crazy. He may remember some things but not all. One of the crown witnesses stated that he looked like a man on a long spree. Is there a doubt but that this man was drunk? Why was he hanged at execution? You are sitting there in that dock, kicked in the head. And after this the pistol goes off!"

Scores Bitterly Bartender.
 "Look at the class of witnesses you have to deal with. Here is Dublin Burg, row—trying to bet ten dollars that the prisoner would hang, and at the same time he is the chief witness for the crown. A man so lost to all decency is a man who is not worthy of being called a witness by my learned friend's talk. He is an able man. Remember your duty—to consider and weigh the evidence, and remember the prisoner's fate that hangs upon your decision."

Society Really Prosecuting.
 "There is only one source from which sympathy can come," said A. E. A. Creswick, an attorney for the crown, in speaking his address to the jury. "That is from the executive. We have living according to recognized laws, the laws of civilization. The society that is prosecuting this case is a mere name. What does it stand for? It is society at large that is prosecuting the case."

"You have a function to perform here. Unpleasant, it is true, yet, nevertheless, it is your duty to pass truly on the case. There can be no righteous alternative. My duty is to endeavor to bring forth from the witnesses the statements that are true and have direct bearing on the solving of the case. In speaking there in that box to say how much of it you believe, to weigh carefully what you have heard, and then to decide, as men, the right course to pursue."

Terrorizing of Meredith.
 "It is then necessary that you pass judgment in this matter. Do you believe that you could live in a country if juries and judges were so far from feeling that there is in that box to say how much of it you believe, to weigh carefully what you have heard, and then to decide, as men, the right course to pursue."

No Innocent Young Mind.
 "When he came out of the hotel he said to Andrews: 'I'd like to shoot that black . . . Does that show the perfectly clear in all his habits and morals? Does it not rather show the feeling he had in his mind against Blackburn? He remembers that Andrews got on the car. He also remembers that he did not see him at the north end of the block he suffers a lapse of memory.'"

Was Not Satisfied.
 "Even then the prisoner was not satisfied. It was supposed that he went home. He did go home. He remembers that now. He says he did not hear the revolver. He must then either have got his revolver when he went home that night or between 6:30 and 7, or he had it earlier. When he returns he sees the other bartender. Blackburn comes in and notices him at the north end of the bar. He walks to where the prisoner was and tapped him on the shoulder. He tells him that he had enough of him. When they got to the door Blackburn opens it—and the prisoner shot a hole through him."

Was No Fight.
 "There was no fight, on the way to the door. It was right in a small room, and no one heard a word said, that time they left the bar. All they reached the doorway. And yet this man asks you to believe that Blackburn said to him: 'Get away from me or I'll kill you.'"
