CLERGY CONDEMN BREACH OF USAGE

Disregard of Confirmation as Essential for Communion is Deplored.

IS INIMICAL TO CHURCH

Public Avowal of Certain Clergymen Said to Be Subversive of Discipline.

The following resolution was moved by Rev. J. R. MacLean and carried unanimously at a meeting of the Churchmen's League in St. John's parish house, Portland street:

"That whereas certain clergymen of the Church of England have made a public avowal that confirmation is not essential for participation in the Holy Communion, and have also invited all and sundry to the holy table; and whereas the said avowal and action are contrary to the spirit, usage, doctrine and canon law of the church, for which we, this body of clergy and laity of the Church of England now assembled, while acknowledging the good faith and high motives of the clergy in question, would have with place ourselves on record as being of the conviction that as being that has been taken is not only inopportune at the present moment, but also inimical to the church's best interest and entirely subversive of its discipline, making for lawlessness and unsettling the minds of the members of the church with respect to what they have ever been taught to regard as part of the church's life...

SPOKE ON AUTONOMY.

Mr. R. S. Neville addressed the members of the Chamberlain Chapter, I.O.D.E., yesterday afternoon on the subject of autonomy. Autonomy, or self-government, the speaker explained, was a strong aid towards the development of self-control to a nation or individual. He urged the realization by Canadians of their duty to the empire and stated that it would be a colony's own fault if anything ill befel such a nation as the great one of which we are happily a part.

EFFICIENT HOUSEKEEPING

BY HENRIETA A. GRAVEL DOMESTIC SCIENCE LECTURER

Cooking By Electricity. Electricity is practical, but the devices we are offered seem designed for doll houses or cal, but the devices we are offered seem designed for doll houses or cal, but the devices we are offered seem designed for doll houses or cal...

Wherever there is water power electricity can be produced, and the first cost of equipment is all that needs to be considered for doll houses or cal, but the devices we are offered seem designed for doll houses or cal...

An electric cooker with four discs and an oven is about the size that a family of six will need. Special utensils must be bought for this, for there is economy in having the cooking pans and kettles fit snugly.

The cost of operating the cooker is, of course, however, the following figures were compiled by a farm woman in the inter-mountain west, where the cost of power is five cents a kilowatt hour.

To boil a quart of water in a kettle not previously heated required twelve minutes and cost three-fourths of a cent. To bake a layer-cake took forty minutes, and two-thirds of a cent's worth of electricity was used; this includes heating the cooker. Four loaves of bread needed an hour and twenty minutes' baking and seven cents' worth of electricity was used.

A dinner for six consisting of cream soup, five pounds of roast beef, baked potatoes, asparagus with white sauce, cottage pudding and coffee, required two hours to cook, and thirty-five cents' worth of power. Five cents more electricity was needed to heat water for washing dishes.

Compared with the cost of gas or coal in baking bread, the following figures are offered by an electrician: Coal $0.021, gas $0.025, electricity $0.0175, showing that the last is both slow and expensive; but it is sure, clean and always ready. Besides it is not dangerous. It only needs a well-ventilated range or oven to make it efficient.

Houses wired for electricity can be fitted with many wonderful electrical conveniences for a small price, for the majority of these implements are practically indestructible.

There are several manuals on the proper use of electricity, published for free distribution by various electrical firms, and these show some undiscovered uses for the electrical iron, hot plate, vacuum cleaner and other inventions. These little books are well worth sending to manufacturers for, as they point out ways to save on the amount of fluid used.

It is very difficult to advise on the use of electrical devices, as they all differ from one another, but the writer will be glad to give any possible assistance to her readers.

The electric iron seems the most popular of all the inventions in this line and fortunately its workmanship is so simple as to need little attention to secure best results.

THE GARDEN NURSERY

CONDUCTED BY RACHEL R. TODD M.D.

The Infectious Fevers.

While the measles rash is out the child must be kept in bed and special care exercised against his taking cold. During the fever stage the child may suffer from inflamed eyes. They should be frequently bathed with warm water and protected from strong light.

If the fever continues and the child be ill after the rash has disappeared, dangerous complications may set in. The commonest are bronchitis, inflammation of the lungs and inflammation of the eyes or ears.

After an attack the system is predisposed to infection by various germs, and it should be built up by careful feeding, and extra supply of fat-producing and tissue-building foods is recommended.

German measles is a disease quite distinct from ordinary measles. As a rule the disease is milder. The rash appears on the second day and is usually very irritating. The glands at the side of the neck become enlarged. There is no coughing, as in measles, and the convalescence is rapid.

Whooping cough is very contagious. It begins like a cold, but soon becomes an ordinary cough, which may last some weeks before the characteristic "whoop" is heard. Children of all ages may contract this disease, and young babies are especially liable to have it if exposed. There are two stages: the first is the "ordinary cold" stage, which lasts about ten days; then comes the second or spasmodic stage of the "whoop." The risk of infection is not over until the child ceases whooping entirely, and it is remembered that this disease may be transmitted by the mother or nurse.

In bad cases the fits of coughing will come on every half hour or even more frequently, and are frequently accompanied by vomiting. Sometimes the violence of the cough causes bleeding from the nose. No distinct cure for whooping cough has been found, and drugs do more harm in upsetting the stomach than in curing the cough. Keep the child as well nourished as possible, and give him plenty of fresh air day and night. Where much food is lost by vomiting, the question of nourishment is a serious one. Food most nourishing should be chosen, and a glass of milk or white of egg or beef juice given right after an attack of coughing. The bowels must be kept open, and occasionally a dose of castor oil should be given. If there is difficulty in breathing, the chest should be rubbed or a mustard plaster applied for a few minutes at night.

The chief dangers to be feared are bronchitis and inflammation of the lungs.

After three or four weeks the patient should be out as much as possible, but kept away from other children. It is wise to fumigate the child's room occasionally during the illness, as well as at its close.

WILD FLOWERS

CONDUCTED BY RACHEL R. TODD

The Trillium. Wake Robin.

"Modest, yet withal an elf, Bold and lavish of herself."

The white trillium of our Ontario woods is often called the "wake robin" because the pure blossom of frail petals is often spread wide open, ready to smile a good-day to the first robin.

The trilliums are so easy to recognize that no one has the least excuse for not discovering them. As Harriet Keeler points out, you may know all trilliums by their strict adherence to the rule of three.

Three petals to the flower, three daisy green sepals, three styles, three-lobed seed pod, and the leaves are whorls of three, out of which short springs the one blossom an inch wide. Late in the autumn the three-lobed seed pod becomes a three-lobed reddish brown berry, about half an inch in diameter.

In moist, rich woods, shaded by the early-leaving trees, in warm thickets, on sunny hillides, up and down among ravines and in all sorts of shaded spots, the white trillium loves to dwell.

Many gardeners who are fond of cultivating a wild flower corner make a practice of gathering the short tuber-like root stocks, in the late summer, when it is quite safe to bring the plants in from the woods. Curled up in the leaves of the year, next year's leaves lie hidden thro' the winter.

Strange that some of our most delicate and dainty flowers are haunted with an unpleasant odor. Trillium is sometimes quite offensive to the delicate nostrils of unusually sensitive people. A queer rank fragrance hangs about the blossom, unlike any other odor we remember.

School children delight to bring in great clumps of these flowers, always a sure sign that spring is well advanced.

You may find the trilliums almost anywhere in our woods. Spring beauty and heptan dance beside the stream, sometimes a rusty strand of trailing arbutus is found striving to look like trillium's wide-open, laughing face, while even trout lily may be discovered peering into the moist earth to see if others of the same cheery tribe are peeking thro' the mold.

A sepal is one of the under leaves beneath the flower, usually green, but sometimes colored to take the place of the petal.

SHE SEEKS BALM FOR BROKEN HEART

May Davis of Buffalo Sues Mining Broker for Heavy Damages.

Before Judge Latchford in the assize court yesterday May E. Davis of Buffalo commenced an action against George Wetlaufer, a member of a prominent mining firm, now resident of Toronto, for $15,000 damages for an alleged breach of promise to marry her.

According to the evidence of the plaintiff she was employed as a stenographer by the defendant when he promised to marry her. She was then 19 years of age, and after she had entered her first year, she signed an agreement to her evidence Miss Davis in "all manner of actions, debts, duties, causes of action, suits, debts, duties, etc." For signing this agreement she received the sum of $700 in instalments.

Two or three years ago Wetlaufer moved to Toronto, and was followed to the city by the plaintiff last January. According to her evidence Miss Davis was under the impression that this agreement was not binding and was only to satisfy the defendant's brother.

She thought she could still marry him and he acted towards her as an intended husband till December, 1913, she says. The case will proceed this morning.
