

NAVAL MEMORIAL SERVICE IS HELD

British and Foreign Sailors' Society Honors Those Who Have Died.

SPECIAL INTERCESSORY

Flags Representing All Parts of Service Blessed by Minister.

A naval memorial service was held last evening at West, Presbyterian Church, College street, by the Canadian national branch of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society. Rev. Alfred Hall conducting the service. A special intercessory was also held in aid of the allied cause. The service also commemorated the passing of the seven hospital ships sunk by the Germans during the past year.

The pastor, Rev. Dr. Turnbull, turned for his text the words, "No Mercy," showed that this was the motto of the German navy, citing many cases illustrating this fact. He then cited many more cases showing the opposite side of the picture of the war, in which the British navy evinced a very different spirit. There had been occasions when the British sailors had rescued Hun prisoners from wrecks effected by their own naval boats.

At the close of the sermon 25 sailors carried 25 flags representing the different parts of the naval service. These were presented before the pulpit, and prayers were offered on behalf of the navy.

The president of this association is Aemilius Jarvis, and the chairman of the national council is Mr. Justice Craig. The president of its national ladies' guild is Lady Willson.

due Inspector Stafford and his assistant, Charles Koeber, for producing such excellent results.

The antics of the demimure "Pud" (Bruce Cornell), kept the audience in a room of laughter, and the work of Frank Hendry and Frank Sievert, with their tumbling clowns, caused much amusement. The work on the high wire by Messrs. Sievert, Margus, Fuzackerly and Satterthwaite was excellent.

Variety was afforded by the dancing of a group of girls from the Faridole Presbytery Church, and the Scotch dancing of Gertrude and Dick Moore, to the piping of Pipe-Major Murray.

RELIGION DISPELS

PANIC AND DESPAIR

Rev. Dr. A. E. Ribourg of St. Alban's Cathedral took for his subject last night: "The Power of Religion," and declared that religion has great real value in that it ought to be a protection against panic and despair.

Dr. Ribourg said in part: "Moral strength and calmness ought to be the characteristic marks of a Christian in these anxious and trying days. There are times when all human power fails, when cleverness is as naught. In the face of the present events there are but two things to do—strengthen ourselves and do our duty to the best of our ability with calmness and courage. The men who have most helped civilization all ages are the men who have recognized that the divine will cannot be ultimately defeated and who have placed themselves wholly at the service of that will and made its triumph the object of their desires and efforts. These men have risen above the perplexities and the vicissitudes of their day with a fortitude and good will which made their names immortal and thus must we act today."

BEAUTY CHATS

By EDNA KENT FORBES.

Don't Be a Drudge

No woman is old until she admits it. She may not admit it in so many outspoken words, her actions can speak more plainly than her conversation, that way. But as soon as she starts going about with shoes half loose, hair slicked into an untidy knot, and a misty wrapper—then she admits she's old.

The same way, no woman is homely until she admits it word or deed. One reason why business women stay young looking longer than housewives is because they have to. These interests are broader, of course, and that helps; but their work is usually more routine and monotonous, and that does not help.

The housewife has such a fine chance to let herself slide into carelessness and middle age! There is the old year-before-late dress, "just the thing to wear around to sweep and clean in; nothing could make it look worse than this!" So she chooses the worn-out, homely rag to spend hours of her days in, while her self-respect must ooze out of her. For, why do the hair neatly, when the dress is old; and why wear well-fitting shoes? Such is the frame of mind that makes a pretty woman into a frump in a year or two.

Take pains to be neat at your work, and make your work into a beauty exercise—because it can be done.

The Five-Foot Barrage

Practically the only way people catch coryza, pharyngitis, tonsillitis, quincy, diphtheria, laryngitis, bronchitis, influenza, pneumonia and tuberculosis, is by venturing under the five-foot barrage of some cougher or sneezer. Beyond the five-foot barrage one is comparatively safe from the infectious germ-laden invisible spray given off by a patient in coughing, sneezing, speaking and laughing. United States Army medical officers explain the prevalence of pneumonia among soldiers in cantonments in a way quite different from that assumed by some of the perorages at Washington. The medical officers state that the floor and air space in the barracks were less than sanitary rules demand, therefore it was not possible to have five feet of space between heads. Some politician is to blame for that mistake, of course.

Only the doctor and the nurse need venture under the five-foot barrage. All others can transact any necessary business they may have with a patient in a reasonable distance. A visitor, sympathizer, curiosity—at night, if she can at three feet. The nurse, however, has no wings, no feet, no means of locomotion. They are only where they are carried. And it is a safe working rule that they are not carried beyond the five-foot limit.

In Durand Hospital, Chicago, a variety of contagious diseases are treated, such as meningitis, pneumonia, diphtheria, scarlet fever, etc. No fumigation is used in the hospital, except occasionally for clothing which cannot be sterilized by steam. No antiseptic soap is used for washing hands or for washing the hands of attendants. Soap and water are relied upon for sanitary cleansing. Bedding and all laundry are sterilized in the autoclave before going to the wash. All waste, dressings, etc., are collected in paper bags and burned. Eating utensils are boiled after each use. Face masks of a double thickness of gauze are worn by doctors and nurses, to protect nose and mouth from possible spray infection. These masks have apparently put an end to attacks of tonsillitis, pharyngitis and rhinitis ("cold in head") that were relatively frequent among nurses before the masks were adopted.
