The Time to Buy a Home

London has just passed through the nearest approach to a building boom in its history.

At the same time available housing accommodation grows scarcer.

New industries and business firms are bringing new citizens.

Soldiers returned from overseas are settling here with their families.

The moderate cost of living in London, compared with some other places, is a strong factor in attracting people retiring to the city.

NOT ONE HOUSE in some instances is left for sale in desirable residential blocks where we had FIVE OR SIX a short time ago.

The houses are sold; people living in them; the big demand continues for houses in these localities.

Building operations will be practically at a standstill during the winter months.

Inevitably housing accommodation will be even more scarce in the spring than it is now.
