Scarfs and Ruchings

Paris, France, June 10.—No part of a woman's attire lends more elegance to the silhouette showing the personal grace of the wearer than the supple scarf, draped with art, following every motion of the figure. At all periods feminine coquetry has been aware of this fact, and when the Directory and First Empire revived the fashions of antiquity, no one knew better than Empress Josephine the manner of using the wonderful Oriental shawls brought back from Egypt by Bonaparte. She often wore them as scarfs, just as we do at present, in the evening; later they appeared larger, becoming real garments, costly marvels also, and their vogue reached its climax under the patronage of the most beautiful of our Sovereigns, Empress Eugenie. Her stately grace endowed them with a peculiar charm, and wrapping one's self became such an art that novelists of the time spoke of the question in their books. "A well-bred woman," says Balzac, the famous French author and psychologist, "has a way of her own to drape her shawl."

As in all things of this world, fashion brings a revival of the past, and scarfs to-day are growing so large that they recall these ancient shawls, without, however, adopting their complicated designs. By a remarkable fancy the taste for cashmere disappears when increases the favor for scarfs, and the soft draperies worn by our stylish women display for the greater part plain materials. A noticeable preference is marked for those fashioned in very supple black satin, lined in white or fancy color, bearing at each end large, heavy motifs of passementerie or bows of ribbon. In fact, these are all the rage; every woman, if she desires stylishness, absolutely must have one of these novelties. The scarf is placed at present in the following manner: Covering one shoulder, it follows the figure in the back, passes under the right arm, and is thrown over the left side, leaving only a single flap hanging in front. Occasionally a passementerie motif is set on the shoulder. They are more lithe and vaporous for lingerie gowns, but many will keep them dark in black tulle or mousseline de soie, or arranged of both materials, showing in transparency the embroideries of the frock, or else of Chantilly lined with white or pink mousseline de soie. Of linen, adorned with laces, matching those of the dress, they will look also very harmonious and original. Some fanciful models are seen of tulle, with large flossy flowers embroidered "au passe," and in etamine worked with variegated silks, beads even, forming rare beautiful designs in Russian or Byzantine styles. A white muslin scarf, entirely embroidered, with pearls of same hue, looked very attractive and novel.

In Midsummer, for driving, the stole will be replaced by "Pierrot ruches," which many good houses are preparing in pretty patterns of very filmy material mixed with large silk or crepe flowers, veiled by the tissue. One of these, in white tulle, displaying large, fully-blown roses, framed beautifully the lovely countenance of the wearer.

In the evening, besides Ninon veil, point applique and Bruges, we note gold and silver mesh, enhanced with metallic embroidery, and one of our most elegant society women wore lately, at the Opera, a black net scarf, dotted with rhinestones, producing a rare and sumptuous impression.

Brides' Lingerie Dresses Portraying Simple Elegance and Loveliness

These dainty dresses were never more popular than they are this season, hundreds of them playing important roles in wedding festivities.

Some of this season's most fashionable brides have chosen as "that all-important gown" these simple yet beautiful fine lingerie dresses. Bridesmaids and attendants have looked their fairest in charming frocks of the same style, and for the hot weather dress no prettier could be conceived. Standing by our reputation as "the bride's store," we have attended to her interests by preparing a special lot of dresses that, without a doubt, are the prettiest in every way that we've ever had for anything like the price.

We illustrate our special $20.00 gown; made in accordance with our own specifications; notice the beautifully defined waist line, the splendid fit of the shirt sleeves, the fashionable combination trimming (one of the newest features of imported gowns), showing row after row of German Val panels of lovely Swiss embroidery and flounces and rows of eyelet embroidery, and set into this soft mull dress in the most effective manner; if you'd secure one of the daintiest dresses of the season don't miss these; quantity limited; all sizes, from 32 to 42. Very special $20.00

Another handsome dress, deserving of special mention, is of all-over eyelet embroidery, not the ordinary kind that at once suggests itself to you, but a pattern decidedly distinctive in design; various widths are used for trimmings, the flounce being of wide embroidery, finished with rows of imitation bebe Irish insertion and German Val, giving the most charming effects; the waist is a combination of same, finished with low, square neck and short sleeves. All sizes $18.50

At $10.00—We've a dress that's nothing short of a marvel for the money; every seam and line seems curved to make the wearer appear to her best advantage; it's made of a beautiful quality of fine lawn, with profusion of lace and embroidery trimmed insertion in the most artistic fashions; the sleeves are long and fit the arm perfectly; finished with insertion; it's a dress that looks worth twice the money; all sizes. Special $10.00

A System That Does Away With Paying Drivers at Your Door.

The "C.O.D." parcel is a convenience only as it serves to accommodate you in your phone orders, or as it occasionally comes to your aid when you would make a purchase and haven't the money with you.

But there is a system of "shopping without money" that combines all these possible benefits, and makes the "C.O.D." method appear very incomplete beside it. This is—

The Customers' Deposit Account

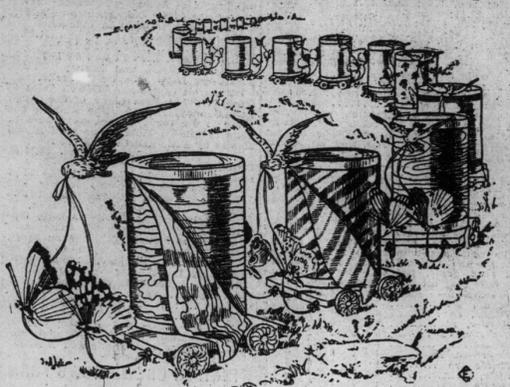

Works Out This Way—You deposit a sum of money at our "D. A." office, in Basement, thus opening an "account" with us; you then phone in your order to the City Order Department (or send it by mail, or shop in person), and advise us to charge that purchase to your "D. A." account; the money you have on deposit with us.

The Advantages Are, Briefly—No necessity to carry money while shopping, no paying drivers at door for phone orders and C.O.D. parcels.

A monthly statement sent you, showing in detail your purchases, deposits, withdrawals and balance at your credit. We allow interest on your daily credit balances.

Try the "D. A." system of shopping and phone in your orders. For further information call at Customers' Deposit Account Department, Basement, Centre Stairway.

The Ribbon Event a Hummer

The second of the three days of rare value-giving in rich and new fancy ribbons only the more strongly emphasizes the fact that all that goes to make up a "rousing success" is contained in liberal proportions in this bumper event.

The goods are amongst the best of their kind and come direct from famous Swiss and French looms; the patterns are fashion-favored, the color blendings perfect and of a high order. Through our readiness to unload overstocked manufacturers with quick cash offers you have the privilege of paying A THIRD LESS—A HALF LESS—than usual prices.

With these facts in mind it is difficult to understand how any woman with the ready money to fill future ribbon needs now would miss so profitable an opportunity. More favorable buying in desirable ribbons has not come under our observation this six months.

This attraction is now added to the first consignment: At 29c per yard—An elegant taffeta ribbon, that would ordinarily command twice the price; it is 6 inches in width, and with some of the handsomest color combinations in the most elaborate patterns; rich verdure designs, shadow effects, dainty apple blossom patterns; some of these gorgeous arrangements have never before been attempted in ribbons; colors are sky, navy, wine, rose, pink, Nile, Tuscan, moss, myrtle, Alice; 6 inches wide; this is one of the most noteworthy values of the special selling, three-day clearance. Price, per yard 29c
