

Poetry, &c.

MY BROKEN BUD. I had a precious gift from heaven: Oh! it was passing fair...

Rich odors from its heart it breathed, Of most surpassing sweet. It was a bright celestial bud...

Never was thing more dearly loved Than my fair beautiful flower— And closer to my heart of hearts...

And yet we parted, and yet we hoped. Still cheered by some slight token. One more I found, and agonized...

But I could not be that my broken— My dreams of bliss were fled? Oh could it—could it be, alas...

Sad, sad the change that had passed o'er My bloom fair and bright! They tore it from my bleeding heart...

But I shall see my bud again, 'Midst fairest flowers of heaven. Oh! then in bright, celestial bloom...

That is, every body that knows him. He is an apprentice boy, about seventeen years old, the son of a poor widow...

I know another lad, a little older. He too is an apprentice, and his mother is a widow. He hurries from his work in the evening...

A STRIP OF LUCK.—The New-Bedford Mercury records the history of a naval adventure, which shows that Mr. Fortune, like Miss Fortune, does not always come single-handed...

That feature of Mary's childhood which she most fondly remembers, is an intense thirst for knowledge, a natural inclination to ask, Why? What for? What makes it so?

One day, upon its tender stem It could not lift its head,— Under through its heart one shed...

One day, upon its tender stem It could not lift its head,— Under through its heart one shed...

One day, upon its tender stem It could not lift its head,— Under through its heart one shed...
