FIGHT SCENE IN GEM

PICTURE A THRILLER

One of Greatest Fistic Combats Ever Screened in "Then I'll Come Back to You"—Vaudeville Fine

There were no two opinions about the Gem's new programme presented last night to enthused gatherings of patrons.
Excitement, thrills, comedy and some great dancing combined in a well divided entertainment that satisfied everybody and upheld this theatre's reputation for good performances.

The picture feature "Then I'll Come Back to You," is a lumber camp romance, with city life as well. It is a picture of a noted story written by Larry Evans, author of "Once to Every Man," and which ran as a serial in the Metropolitan Magazine. It centres around Steve O'Mara, reared in the lumber woods, then going out into the world where he falls in love with the daughter of a lumber king. Alice Brady, star of screen and stage, plays this part. Steve becomes a contracting engineer and comes back to the logging camp where the girl's father and accepted lover oppose his plans. The lover even goes so far as to hire a gigantic bully to thrash Steve, and then comes the great fist fight. It is a scene against brown, in the open with a group of excited spectators from the camps. The fight is really terrific. It is not a brief exchange of sham blows, but a long drawn out battle in which mighty smashes fell first one, then the other; they wrestle, spar for openings, then clash again with terrific force, while close-up flashes of the spectators show the strained interest. Steve wins, but only after a fearful struggle. So thrilling is the battle that it was hard to keep from crying out as you watched it. There are also other big scenes this A. N. I. picture.

The vaudeville acts also are excellent and round out a banner programme.
Burton, the American ventriloquist, is first to appear. He uses one lay figure but he makes that gentleman give a
