THE DIAMOND BUTTON

FROM THE DIARY OF A LAWYER AND THE NOTE BOOK OF A REPORTER.

By BARCLAY NORTH.

Copyrighted, 1889, by O. M. Dunham. Published by Special Arrangement through the American Press Association.

Summary of Preceding Chapters.

Three men, two walking rapidly, enter Union Square at mid-night and meet near the Washington monument. One of the two kills the other, in view of the third, who gives the alarm. A lawyer, Holbrook, also saw the deed and says the murderer threw away an overcoat in his flight. The coat is found, the witness tells his name is Wessing. He is locked up but is liberated on promising to testify at the inquest. The dead man is a Mr. Templeton. On his way home Holbrook is impelled to the scene of the murder and picks up a diamond cuff button which he puts in his pocket. About half a mile distant a young man just from his club, discovers the button holes of his right cuff are torn out and the button gone. Tom Bryan, a shrewd reporter gets the facts and turns detective. The button did not belong to Templeton. Holbrook calls on Flora Ashgrove, who says she believes Wessing is guilty. Holbrook defends him and describes the murderer. Miss Ashgrove is alarmed, She sees the diamond button and is relieved. The wife and sister of the dead man secure Holbrook's services. Bryan and Holbrook see Miss Ashgrove in the theatre. She is cool to Holbrook and as a young man approaches, is evidently alarmed. A shadow employed by Bryan says the young man's name is Harry Fountain. Next day Harry Fountain and Wessing call on Holbrook about the death of a Mr. Pierson. Later a lawyer of shady reputation, named George Parker, calls with similar inquiry. In each case Holbrook imparts no information. Miss Ashgrove summons Harry Fountain, her accepted lover, to Newport and secures his promise to avoid Holbrook. Harry fears she has discovered something he wished to be a secret. Fountain meets Bryan who subsequently agrees with Holbrook's theory, indicating that the murderer is Fountain.

Tom calls at the district attorney's office to give him facts shewing Fountain's guilt. He is amazed on hearing from friends there that Fountain was with a yachting party over a hundred miles away, at the time of the murder.

Holbrook tells Miss Ashgrove of Fountain's innocence, but for some reason he cannot learn. Bryan meanwhile goes off on another track and accidentally interviews Parker who asks what Bryan knows about Pierson.

"That's about all. I learned it by accident. I know why he assumed it—it was because he wanted to marry a woman under that name."

The face of the old man took on an expression of serious alarm. Tom watched him narrowly.

"Ah, had he any children?" asked the old man.

"Yes, I think so. A son and a daughter."

"A daughter," repeated the old man, and now he seemed puzzled. "I think, Mr. Bryan, you have information of great value to us—more valuo than you know. Cannot we go to some quiet place where we can exchange confidences? I should not be surprised if your information were worth paying for handsomely."

Tom felt that he was getting into shallow water, for he had been drawing upon his imagination for his facts, led to go on from the evident alarm he was causing the old man.

It was not his purpose to go further, so he said:

"I am always on the make, if I can do it squarely, Mr. Parker. I have no objection to giving you all the information I possess on the subject. But I cannot go now; I have an important engagement at which I am already overdue."

"Can we not meet this evening?"

"No—engagement again."

"To-morrow, then. No, not to-morrow. I have engagements out of town. This is Thursday; make it Monday next, at 11, at this spot."

"All right. This place is convenient for me."

"One moment, Mr. Bryan. Do you know where the son—Fountain, you know—is now?"

"I do not know, but I could obtain knowledge easily, I think."

"Very well. Don't fail me on Monday."

Tom hurried away, glad to escape, for from a sense of pure mischief he had been led into this encounter.

"I'll have to concoct a story," he said to himself, "and meet the old man on Monday. I may learn something of value. But what was it in my lie that disturbed him so? Let me see; he is making a claim on behalf of that old drunkard on the ground that the old sot is a brother of the late Pierson. Now, if that is so, one of them bears an assumed name. Which? From his disturbance when I said Pierson had once been known as Fountain, it must have been the dead man. Now what? Why, he is frightened about the idea of the marriage and wants to know about the issue. Um."

Just then he crossed the path of one of New York's most eminent lawyers.

"Good afternoon, Mr. Bryan," said the distinguished ornament of the bar.

"Good afternoon, judge," returned Tom as he stopped him. "Judge, I want a woodshed opinion."

The distinguished man laughed.

"They are often the most expensive kind of opinions, even if you do get them for nothing, Mr. Bryan."

"Nevertheless, I'll risk it, with so great an authority. I am on the hunt of a mysterious affair. Not five minutes ago I had a conversation with a man who touches the matter slightly, and I made a remark or two which disturbed him greatly. He was not at all frank or communicative, so I tried to reason it out, and I ran against a legal wall."

"Well, if I can assist I should be pleased."

"Let me put a supposititious case: John Smith marries a woman under the name of Jacob Brown and raises a family of children. He amasses a fortune under the name of John Smith—living a double life—and dies without a will. John Smith is supposed to be childless. Can his children under the name of Brown claim to inherit the property?"

"There is no other or previous marriage of which there is issue?"

"No."

"Well, I should say if the identity of John Smith and Jacob Brown could be established that the Brown children could inherit and the mother take her dower rights."

"Notwithstanding there was an undisputed brother of John Smith claimant to the estate?"

"Yes, notwithstanding there was a claimant in the person of a brother. But you understand that this is an opinion given on your statement of the facts."

"Thanks," said Tom, "I can see through the wall now, and it helps me greatly."

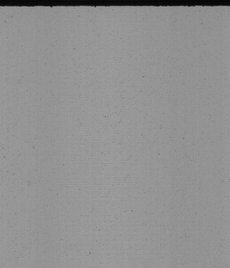
"He moved off. "Ah," he said to himself, "that's what frightens Parker. His little scheme would go to grass if my little romance were true."

With this, Tom dismissed the incident from his mind and set about finding the Shadow. This was quickly done, and Tom dismissed him for the day.

Then he thought seriously about calling upon Fountain, and finally determined to seek him. With Tom, to decide was to act, and forthwith he sought the places where he thought the gentleman was most likely to be found.

CHAPTER XXIV.

HOLBROOK TAKES UP THE CASE WITH RENEWED INTEREST.



THE visit to Flora Ashgrove had brought forth a fact which was of importance, though in Holbrook's mind it did not receive the consideration it was entitled to. His mind was fixed upon establishing the lines connecting Fountain and the dead Templeton, and the relation they bore to the dead Pierson.

These lines established, he thought the way to the determination of the mystery would be straightforward and rapid. Hence he gave little thought to the fact that an owner of the diamond button had probably been found.

He did not blame Flora for refusing to yield up the secrets of Fountain, and in fact respected her reserve. He did wish, however, that Tom had not gone to Fountain before the result of his visit to Flora had been known, and his first impulse was to set out in search of his journalistic friend and communicate the facts in his possession. Indeed, it would be so much easier to meet and talk with Fountain after the interview with Flora.

A little reflection told him how useless would be the effort, for he had no knowledge of Tom's plans.

It was now late in the afternoon, and he could do nothing if he returned to his office, so he determined to call upon the Templetons and see if he could not elicit something from them that would point to their connection with Pierson.

He found both ladies in and both unaffectedly glad to see him. He plunged at once into his subject by asking if they had any relatives of the name of Pierson.

Mrs. Templeton was quite sure she had none, and as equally sure Mr. Templeton had none.

On Mr. Templeton's side it was easy of settlement. Her husband, after his uncle's death, whose name was the same, had no relatives in this country, however remote. He maintained a correspondence with relatives of the same name in England and also with those upon his mother's side, of the name of Colchester.

He had visited England a few times during his life, and on two occasions relatives had visited him in this country, but they had returned to their own home.

On the occasion of his death she had received many kind letters of condolence from his family abroad, many from those of whom she had never even heard before, but among them all there was none of the name of Pierson. These letters she had preserved, and if of any use to Mr. Holbrook she would give them to him.

As to her own relatives, she had already told Mr. Holbrook all she knew about them.

Holbrook pursued his inquiries as to her father's relatives. Did she know anything of the brother of her father?

"Very little," was the reply. He had run away to sea before she was born, and all she had heard of him was long ago. Not since he had been lost of him, and after he was supposed to be dead. Evidently he had done something wrong, for the elders took little pleasure in speaking of him, and when they did it was in a tone of relief that he was dead. He had died in her childhood.

Holbrook then said that though they had made little progress in the unfolding of the mystery surrounding the death of her son, yet they were steadfastly at work at it. That while he had thought it best to say little to them about it while they were groping in the dark, they had in their investigation thought, perhaps, a man of the name of Pierson, who had died recently, had been connected with the events.

It was strange, but none the less true, that Tom had failed to tell Holbrook of the report the Shadow had made to him of the scene between the drunkard Preston and Parker. Had he done so Holbrook undoubtedly would have elicited something from Mrs. Templeton which would have put another aspect upon affairs. As a matter of fact, the report of the Shadow had made but little impression on Tom at the time, for his mind then was concentrated upon the task of fastening the crime of murder upon Fountain. Such thought as he did give to it was that, perhaps, a discreet inquiry in that direction might lead up to a discovery of some of Pierson's surroundings, which might help them to an understanding of how Templeton, Fountain and Pierson were connected. And so it was that Holbrook was treading close upon facts of great value without being conscious of it.

However, satisfied that Mrs. Templeton could tell him nothing that could be of value, he dropped the subject, and turned the conversation in another channel.

But Annie, who was sitting at the window engaged in embroidery work, and making a very pretty picture as she sat there, remarked that she was afraid the search was being continued, for though they had heard little about it recently, we were greatly interested in it.

Holbrook, who thought there was something of gentle reproach in the words, said:

"The truth is, Miss Templeton, nothing has been accomplished. For ten days we have been under the impression that we could lay our hands upon the man, but this morning we discovered that the man in question could not have possibly done the deed. We hardly dared to admit to ourselves our suspicions, and I should have been greatly to blame had I raised false hopes in your breast or had I pointed to a suspicion that could not be justified. Rest assured that everything is being done that can be done to uncover the mystery."

"Oh!" said Annie, covered with confusion and blushing very prettily, "I had no intention of complaining. Indeed we are really too much obliged to you for the trouble you have taken in our affairs to criticise or to complain."

During this exchange Holbrook had moved from his chair in the middle of the room, where he had been conversing with Mrs. Templeton, and taken a low, easy one near the window where Annie sat.

Mrs. Templeton had turned to the table and had resumed the writing of a letter she was engaged upon when Holbrook entered.

The young lawyer was already on such familar footing that he was regarded not as a stranger to whom the most scrupulous attention must be given, but rather as an intimate who was best treated when received with informality.

In answer to Annie's reply to him he said:

"I do not think, Miss Templeton, that anything which might concern you or yours would be too much trouble for me."

The blood crept up into Annie's cheeks again, and bending over her work she said nothing.

The Summer season about exhausted the features of prettitude accompanying the "Little Lord Fauntleroy's" fever. There will not be as much bang and curls about the youngsters this Winter. It is a credit to the large majority of younger America that they were against the lackadaisical environments of a purely picturesque costume in hearty prohibitory of the rough and tumble fun which is one of the harbingers of youth and the essentials of a healthful growth. Quite as trim, handsome and happy are the rising generation in the smart, neat costumes which the leading manufacturers have put upon the market lifting them out of the transient epoch of namby-pambyism into the grateful freedom of youthful joyousness, natural and unrestrained.

What is Wanted

Is something that will make a man sleep well, eat well and rise in the morning refreshed and strong, with none of the worn out tired feeling sure to be found where constipation, dyspepsia or diseases of the stomach, liver, bowels and blood exist. Burdock Blood Bitters meets every indication expressed above.

Important to Workingmen.

Artizans, mechanics, and laboringmen are liable to sudden accidents and injuries, as well as painful cords, stiff joints and lameness. To all thus troubled we would recommend Hagyard's Yellow Oil, the handy and reliable pain cure for outward or internal use.

The Best ever Made.

Gentlemen,—My trouble was heart disease and dyspepsia, but I took two bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters and one of Burdock Pills and got well. I never felt better in my life. My brother has also tried B. B. B. and thinks it a splendid medicine.

MRS. JNO. EARLY, Hamilton, Ont.

Sleepless Worry

Is often occasioned by a harassing, tickling cough which might easily be cured if the right remedy—Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam was made use of. Its soothing, healing and expectorant qualities make it wonderfully useful in every family for coughs and colds.

Joy in Jasper.

I can recommend Burdock Blood Bitters as a sure cure for scrofula. I had it for four years and was so bad at one time that I was almost a solid sore. I commenced taking B. B. B. last summer, have taken three bottles, and am entirely cured now.

MISS ELLEN PIPER, Jasper, Ont.

For Frost Bites.

There is no better remedy for frost bites, chilblains, and similar troubles than Hagyard's Yellow Oil. It also cures rheumatism, lumbago, sore throat, deafness, and lameness and pain generally. Yellow Oil is used internally and externally.
