The amount of feed given is to be decided with such a regard to drainage as will ensure dryness. The stable roof should be built and with such a regard to drainage as will ensure dryness. The stable roof should be sured ryness. The stable roof should be suffered in any case and should be well ventilated, and in such a way that there will be no currents of cold air reaching the horses. When there is but one passage in the stable, the ventilators may ascend from this. It is well to secure plenty of light, but this should not come too directly upon the eye, as in such a case it unduly excites the horse. The stall should be 5½ feet wide and 8 feet long. If a shorter length the horse often stands with his hind feet too low; there is also danger of fajury from a kicking neighbor, and of slipping-she stifle. For feeding out an iron box is the test, it is so easily cleaned. When horses are fed in a box there should be a grate in the bottom to allow of the rejected particles falling through.

The amount of feed given is to be determined by the size of the horse and the termined by the size of the horse and the exercise or wark to which he is subjected. High feeding during a period of rest induces indigestion, inflammation of the kidneys and various other diseases. The greatest mistake here consists in feeding an undue amount of hay. If a horse eats hay for one hour; in the morning he has enough, at midday none at all, but at night a larger quantity, and this will apply to farm horses as well, although when the days are long they may have a small feed. TINSHOP Japanned, Stamped AND Plain Tinware, a larger quantity, and this will apply to farm horses as well, although when the days are long they may have a small feed. Water should be given before feeding, when the horses can be induced to drink then, but sometimes they cannot after having been used with the contrary.

Much attention should be given to the shaking up of the bedding, that it may be aired. Horses should be groomed carefully; indeed, too much attention cannot be given to this particular. It is not commendable to clip horses on the approach of winter, as it is always attended with a good deal of risk, without sufficiently corresponding advantages.

When they return from a journey, a little water will be very grateful to them, but more water and the feed of grain should not be given until the temperature becomes normal. The Peerless Creamer, ROCHESTER LAMP, The Success OIL STOVE ---Also a nice selection of----Parlor and Cooking Stove
