THE FIRST OFFENCE.
In the cheerful dining-room of my bachelor friend Stevenson, a select party was assembled to celebrate his birthday. A very animated discussion had been carried on for some time, as to whether the first deviation from rectitude should be treated with severity or leniency. Various were the opinions, and numerous the arguments brought forward to support them. The majority appeared to lean to the side of 'crush all offences in the bud,' when a warm-hearted old gentleman exclaimed, 'Depend upon it, more young people are lost to society from a first offence being treated with injudicious severity, than from the contrary extreme. Not that I would pass over even the slightest deviation from integrity, either in word or deed; but, on the other hand, neither would I punish with severity an offence committed, perhaps, under the influence of temptation—temptation, too, that we ourselves may have thoughtlessly placed in the way, in such a manner as to render it irresistible. For instance, a lady hires a servant; the girl has hitherto borne a good character, but it is her first offence; her honesty has never yet been put to the test. Her mistress, without thinking of the continual temptation to which she is exposing a fellow-creature, is in the habit of leaving small sums of money, generally copper, lying about in her usual sitting-room. After a time, she begins to think that these sums are not always found exactly as she left them. Suspicion falls upon the girl, whose duty it is to clean the room every morning. Her mistress, however, thinks she will be quite convinced before she brings forward her accusations. She counts the money carefully at night, and the next morning some is missing. No one has been in the room but the girl; her guilt is evident. Well, what does her mistress do? Why, she turns the girl out of her house at an hour's notice; cannot, in consequence give her a cent; tells all her friends how dreadfully distressed she is; declares there is nothing but ingratitude to be met with among servants; laments over the depravity of human nature; and never dreams of blaming herself for her wickedness—yes, it is wicked—thoughtlessness in this case, constantly exposing to temptation a young ignorant girl; one most likely whose mind if not enveloped in total darkness, has only an imperfect twilight knowledge, whereby to distinguish right from wrong. At whose door, I ask, continued he growing warmer, 'will the sin lie, if that girl, who has never deviated from rectitude and honesty, is ever taken by the devil's snare? Why, at the door of her who, after placing temptation in her very path, turned her into the pitiless world, deprived of that which constituted her only means of obtaining an honest livelihood—her character; and that without one effort to reclaim her, and without one opportunity of retrieving the error, and gaining by future good conduct the confidence of her employer.'
'There is, I fear, too much truth in what you say,' remarked our benevolent host, who had hitherto taken no part in the conversation; 'and it reminds me of a circumstance which occurred in an earlier part of my life, which, as it may serve to illustrate the subject you have been discussing, I will relate. There was a general movement of attention; for it was a well-known fact, that no manufacturer in the town of—' was surrounded with such confidence as was great in my head clerk, who had been long known to me, that I was not in the habit of regularly counting the money when brought to me; but as on this occasion, it had passed thro' other hands, I thought it right to do so. Therefore calling Smith back as he was leaving my counting-house, I desired him to wait a few minutes, and proceeded to ascertain whether it was quite correct. Great was my surprise and concern on finding that there was a considerable deficiency.
'From whom,' said I, 'did you receive this money?'
'Thou who hast said,' blessed are the

THE FIRST OFFENCE.
He replied, "From Mr. —," naming my confidential clerk.
"It is strange," said I, looking steadily at him. "But this money is incorrect, and it is the first time I have found it so." His changed countenance, and his eye fell before mine; but he answered, with a cold composure, "that it was as he had received it."
"It is in vain," I replied, "to attempt to impose upon me, or to endeavour to cast suspicion on one whose character for the strictest honesty and undeviating integrity is so well established. Now, I am perfectly convinced that you have taken this money, and that it is at this moment in your possession; and I think the evidence against you would be thought sufficient to justify me in immediately dismissing you from my service. But you see a very young man; your conduct has, I believe, been hitherto perfectly correct, and I am willing to afford you an opportunity of redeeming the past. All knowledge of this matter rests between ourselves. Candidly confess, therefore, the error of which you have been guilty; restore what you have dishonestly taken; and I will, in return, give you a certificate to serve your future good conduct, to deserve my confidence and respect, and this circumstance shall never transpire to injure you." The poor fellow was deeply affected. In a voice almost inarticulate with emotion he acknowledged his guilt, and said that, having frequently seen me receive the money without comment, he, being interested with it himself, the idea had flashed across his mind that he might easily abstract some without incurring suspicion, or at all events without being detected.
