MODELS FOR NEW ZEALANDERS TO GIVE ENTERTAINMENT HERE

Cultured Polynesians to Present Descriptive Recital in Centenary Church Hall on Tuesday Evening.

In this country where comparatively little is known of native life on the South Sea Islands, it is not strange that unusual interest should be manifested in an elaborately illustrated descriptive recital to be given by cultured Polynesians at Centenary Methodist church on Tuesday evening next.

The Havel family who give the entertainment are exceedingly fine representatives of the Maori people and appear in picturesque native costume.

The program comprises native song, story and New Zealand scenery and is exceedingly unique and pleasing, quaint native music, boat songs and tribal incantations are introduced and the gradual development of a

Worshipful Master Willis of Johnstone L. O. M. No. 24, acted as chairman and Rev. L. A. McLean conducted the opening services, which included hymns, a reading, prayer and a selection by the Leinster Street Quartette.

In opening his address, Mr. Batty said he entertained no animosity to Catholics. It was not his purpose to try to set man against man, neighbor against neighbor, and if he made any mention of the church he was supported, he hoped somebody would attack the Catholic religion, but to discuss the position of our civil rights movement and placed it in the same category as that of the Roman Catholics, but by the church policy of Roman Catholicism.

At the Eucharistic Congress a Roman Catholic prelate from England had declared that the decision of the Roman Catholic church to establish its canon law in Canada, Ne Temere meant Don't be Rash.

On Easter Day the Pope of Rome took Canada out of the category of a mission and placed it in the same category as Italy or Spain in its relation to the church. One of the privileges of this elevation was the promulgation of the Ne Temere decree. It was supposed that the decision of the Roman Catholic church to establish its canon law in Canada, Ne Temere meant Don't be Rash.

On Easter Day the Pope of Rome took Canada out of the category of a mission and placed it in the same category as Italy or Spain in its relation to the church. One of the privileges of this elevation was the promulgation of the Ne Temere decree. It was supposed that the decision of the Roman Catholic church to establish its canon law in Canada, Ne Temere meant Don't be Rash.

Continuing the speaker said the proclamation of the Pope on Easter Day, 1908, was intended to establish the canon law in Canada, and he proceeded to read a number of extracts from this law. The Pope, he said, arrogates the right to annul state laws and denies that the state has the right to recognize the validity of marriage unless the sacrament of the Roman Catholic church is included in the ceremony. The common law declares that the temporal powers must act unconditionally in accordance with the orders of the spiritual powers, and claims for the clergy the right to veto the appointment of judges and to control the direction of public schools.

He was not quoting from an old musty law, but stating the canon law as recognized by church prelates today.

Some people spoke of the dangers of agitation, claiming that it might lead to civil war. But Protestantism was not responsible for the agitation. The question arose through the Roman Catholic prelates who thought Montreal and Quebec were fair samples of Canadian mentality.

When Father Vaughan was in Toronto recently he said he included in his sermon on making the right of agitation and that it took two parties to make a row. But the Roman Catholic church raised the question, and though it may keep quiet in the face of an aroused Protestantism, it will stick to consolidate its position if Protestantism falls asleep.

The speaker declared that Protestantism would not go to sleep till the question was settled, and settled right. Catholics said the Ne Temere decree was a family affair and claimed that Protestant interference was as unwarranted as interference of Catholics would be in regard to the regulations of some churches excluding liquor sellers from membership. But it was not a family affair, it was a question of interference with the doctrine of equal rights in civil matters. If the Roman Catholic priest claims that he alone has the right to marry a Catholic and a Protestant, and the Protestant minister claims that he alone is entitled to marry a Protestant and a Catholic, the whole question is reduced to absurdity.

The question affected too many people outside the Catholic church. In 1910 there were 1569 mixed marriages in Ontario alone, over 1500 more would be broken up.

Another argument against the agitation was that there was something to be said for the Catholics against it. The Catholic church was said to be opposed to clandestine marriages, which, according to Webster, meant secret marriages. Yet a marriage at Amherst performed by the priest in the presence of two witnesses was perfectly valid, while another marriage in the Province of Quebec performed in the presence of thousands was said to be illegal.

Continuing, he said there were Roman Catholic lawyers who were in the agitation, but the directors of the Halifax Street Railway refused to carry an advertisement of his lecture.

The weak-kneed Protestants were more dangerous than the opposition of their Catholic friends.

All Protestants were under a tremendous responsibility. They should not allow party or social considerations to hold them to sleep, and let the agitation go by default. In the last elections this question overshadowed all others, and men who were strong believers in reciprocity, felt its settlement was more important than any question of business.

Continuing, he said that by acts adopted in Elizabeth's reign, ratified by George III, and never repealed, any foreign potentate was prohibited from interfering in the affairs of the British Empire, and consequently, the Catholic church could have no such privileges in Quebec as was claimed by its leaders.

In conclusion, he said the people should demand one marriage law for the whole Dominion, so that the marriage certificate should have the power behind that is possessed by a dollar bill. While there was any doubt of the validity of marriage, the foundations of civilization were uncertain.

Another thing they wanted was a law making it a criminal offence for a priest, clergyman or potentate to enter a home, and interfere between man and wife.

TWO MINISTERS TO VISIT ENGLAND ON PROROGATION

When Session is Over, Messrs. Rogers and Hazen Will Cross Atlantic on Immigration and Naval Business.

Berlin, Mar. 15.—The situation in the Westphalian coal regions where upwards of 200,000 coal miners are out on strike, is practically unchanged. No serious disorders were reported today from the affected district.

The men were slain mistakenly by a police officer who was shot twice in the face and received another bullet through his helmet, and thinking that the miners were responsible for the fusillade, returned the fire in their direction.
