Editorial Chat

THIS is the twentieth number of this ambitious journal, and already people are forgetting that there was once a time when its weekly visits did not occur. Six more issues and we shall close our first volume. Many people tell us that they will have it bound and put on their shelves. Most of them give the reason that Volume I, of such a publication as this is likely to be, will be valuable. This is flattery.

Next week there will be a coloured cover design by Miss Ramsay, the beautiful face of a wire-haired fox terrier being the subject chosen by this artist. There will be some other talk about dogs, and a good "dog story" by a well-known writer of fiction.

The article on the Colonial Conference has been laid over until next week. Some striking cartoons have been prepared for its illustration.

The editor has been searching for a new serial, but so far has not succeeded in securing one suitable in style and length. He has, however, secured a number of short stories by some prominent British and Canadian writers, and these will appear regularly week by week. The search for a "great" serial will be continued until it is found.

Photographers with "news" pictures or special studies of any kind are invited to communicate with the Art Editor. They will find him appreciative and fairly liberal.
