SMU in SUNS

Barlow fears

regain international competitiveness.

The missing link is human rights. As Barlow points out "the model of North American Free Trade does not protect social programs. It does not protect the standard of living we would want. In Europe they have built in a social charter, they have set aside money for the disadvantaged. We haven't."

Barlow's interpretation of current events becomes electrifying when she begins to thread together the emergence of a global marketplace, the power of trans-national corporations in this new order, and the geo-political agenda of business elites in it.

"I feel that the GST, and the high dollar are part of this agenda. The recession is part of this agenda. This Government has decided that we've got to move from this soft, protected situation, through a cold shower to a leaner, meaner new millenium where we'll be grateful for what we're given, just like the Mexicans," said Barlow.

Canada as we know it is at stake, she insists: "There are three Provinces already talking about a two-tiered health-care system. B.C., Alberta, and Quebec."
