CREAM SEPARATOR PATENTS

Important Decrees and Injunctions in Centrifugal Cream Separator Infringement Litigation.

"ALPHA" De LAVAL PATENTS SUSTAINED.

THE DE LAVAL COMPANY, by advice of counsel, begs to announce, for the information and further caution of all whom the facts may concern, several decisions in its pending Patent Right litigation, of interest and importance to users and intending buyers of Centrifugal Cream Separators.

On June 18th, Judge Cox, sitting in the U. S. Circuit Court for the Northern District of New York, at Canandaigua, N. Y., granted a decree, inclusive of a perpetual injunction, sustaining the material claims of the Von Bechtolsheim patent, better and commercially known as the "Alpha" De Laval patent, in the suit of The De Laval Separator Company, of New York, against Samuel Hotchkiss, of Delaware Co., N. Y., who had been making and selling a cream separator with an interior bowl device, thus held to infringe the "Alpha" patent as charged by the De Laval Company.

Following this decision, Judge Wallace, sitting in the U. S. Court at Syracuse, N. Y., on August 20th, granted an injunction against John Houston, of Hamden, Delaware County, N. Y., an owner and user of one of the so-called Hotchkiss separators, which injunction restrains Houston from the further use of such machine. It is not definitely known how broad the scope of the present decisions may be as regards their immediate bearing upon the manufacture and use of asserted infringing machines other than the ones specifically sued upon in these actions, but due and repeated caution is again given in this respect that no one may have reason for complaint at the possible outcome of such further proceedings as may be necessary in maintaining just and lawful rights and interests.
