KISSING THE BOOK.

A Relic of the Time When Kissing Was General in Merry England.

(From The Lancet.) Sir Francis Jeune and Mr. Justice Gorell have had posted outside the And this is the girl," said papa, two courts of the Probate, Divorce, An true is the girl. Said pape, two courts of the Fronte, Divorce, Saily, whose gr dusting essay was and Admiralty Divisions notices to An Appeal for Higher Standards of witnesses calling their attention to witnesses calling their attention to the fact that they may be sworn in the Scotch manner before giving evidence. That is to say, they may be sworn with uplifted hand, repeating a solemn invocation to the Deity. instead of taking a pook and kissing it after listening to a form repeated by a minor official of the court. The notice to which we refer is repeated outside one of the courts of the Chancery Division, and we have every hope that it may become universal

We have for many years contended that the oath by kissing a book has nothing to commend it, while it is hasty and may become a means of propagation of disease; and we have seen with regret that the statutory permission to swear in the Scote lashion was, as a rule, not known b, witnesses, and frequently, also, that judges, corolers and magistrates rere ignorant of it.

The form of swearing by kissing a book is purely one of custum. There is no direct authority for it in any act of Parliament, or rule, or book of practice. The date also of its introduction is unknown, but this is not because it has been lost in the not because it has been lost in the mists of antiquity, for it is fairly certain that, so recently as at the end of the seventeenth century, if the form existed it was not in any general use. It has been pointed out without an instant's hesitation." certain that, so recently as at the cent of the seventeenth century, if the form existed it was not in any general use. It has been pointed out that Coke in his institutes makes no mention of kissing the book, but writes of the "corporal oath" as thus named because the witness touched with his hand a portion of the Scriptures, and this aspect of the oath no doubt survives in the familiar warning of the usher to witness to remove glove before taking the Testament for the purpose of kissing it. It is also observed that in the "Book of Oaths," of which an edition was pullished in 1639, there is no mention of kissing a took. How the kissing originated is, we believe, almost as much a matter of speculation as is the date at which it became frequent or universal.

The laying of the hand on the Gospels in swearing is, no doubt, of great antiquity, while the laying of the hand on the altar of a deity in invoking the delty to witness a statement or promise is older than the Gospels. The laying of the hand on the Gospels has its parallel in other countries besid a Englant. The keising of the book is, however, we believe, peculiar to England or to, England and Ireland, and it is not quite Ireland, 'and it is not quite easy to assign its origin to the kissing of relies when we apparently find it introduced in England after all veneration for relies had been swept away and made illegal.

It is worth noting that English people were more addicted to kissing

It is worth noting that English people were more addicted to kissing once than they are now. Kising as a form of salutation was so common among them that it excited the interest and amusement of foreigners. Erasmus refers to it, and a Hungarian gentleman who visited London and moved in good society in 1663 was much struck with the way in which men kissed ladies when they greeted them when Hungarians would have shaken hands. Even Frenchmen in the middle ages held kissing as a peculiarity of the English nation, much as we remark upon it now among the French. If is, therefore, at least possible that the kiss bestowed upon the book in taking an outil may not have been so much a kiss of veneration as a form of salutation or seknowledgment by bodily contact, somewhat more ceremonlous than manual contact, but still not associated with any great feeling of solemnity.

It is night impossible to enumerate all that Glasgow has done for the workingmen there, but it may within the same that it has done about everything possible. Homes have been erected for them in every part of the city, and these are rented to the poor at an almost nominal rate. Widows and widowers have two well-equipped homes where they are boarded for a trifling sum, and bables are cared for by city nurses while the bread-winners are at work; and, of course, these homes, etc., are not charities. Penny (two cents) baths are provided by the municipality in all parts of the city where workingmen reside. Municipal tramways take laborers to their work for from one to two cents, and municipal ferries carry them to their shops five miles down the Clyde, if necessary, for two cents. At night the municipality provide, free concerts, free lectures, free night schools and free courses in business and technical studies. There is also a free employment bureau. The city has torn down hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of rookeries that the workingmen's children has torn down hundreds of thou-sands of dollars' worth of rooker-les that the workingmen's children might have play grounds. #### RESETTLING SOUTH AFRICA

Britons Being Rushed to the New Even before peace with the Boers was officially announced, Britain had begun to carry out her plans for resettling South Africa with her own people. Months ago, under official prompting, the immigration associations of London set about bearing a hand with the settlement problem.

The Colonial Immigration Society The Colonial Immigration Society began it by sending out a delegation of several hundred women to Cape Colony for distribution at various points where female help could command high wages, and loyal English feminine influence could do the most good.

The Scottish Settlers' Association, an organization originally formed in Rhodesia, under the patronage and with the assistance of Cecil Rhodes himself, has taken up the Rhodes himself, has taken up the work almost as quickly and on even a gfeater scale. Four months ago a band of 100 Scotch farmers and a greater scale. Four months ago a band of 100 Scotch farmers and laborers was sent out to the Orange River Colony to settle there on the land vacated by burghers. The association was in such a hurry to get its men on the ground that it sent them a little too soon. When they arrived in the new colony it was found that local conditions were hardly ripe for their reception, and Mr. Rhodes' assistance had to be sought. He solved the problem by providing the Scotchmen with grants of land from his own farms in Cape Colony.

Now that peace has been declared, preparations for extending the scope of the work are being made. The capital of the association has been raised to half a million dollars, and English and Scotch agriculturists are to be rushed to holds about 100 gallons of water. The boiler is made of steel, covered with a heat-absorbing material. The hot, persistent California sun that shines almost every day of the year when reflected from the mirrors on the boiler causes such heat that it is possible to obtain 150 pounds of steam pressure in one hour from cold water. When the machine is made ready for work—a task for a boy, who has merely to turn a crank until an indicator shows that the sun is truly focused on the mirrors—it will move around so that its face is kept turned to the sun all day without further manipulation under the force of an automatic engine. The boiler is automatically supplied with water, a safety valve releasing the steam if the pressure should become too great.

All day, every day, from an hour after sunrise to a half hour before sundown, this tireless heat concentrator keeps its shining face turned to the sun, storing up an energy which may be put to almost any use.
