The way to be popular is to give much and take nothing. After all, we ourselves like best the friends who care to know details of our private exeriences, so why should we act toward others as though their affairs were matters of indifference to us? Boer Ladies at Home.

Some interesting notes about the ways and customs of the Dutch ladies appear in the British Weekly from a correspondent who spent some time in Boer households in the Wakkerstroom district of the Transvaal. The ladies, we are told, have very pale complexions, in the whiteness of which they take their pride. To keep off the corching sun's rays, they envelop their heads in white linen scarfs, worn like the nuns and sisters of mercy, and over this wear either the sunbonnet, or "cappie," or a large straw hat tied under the chin with strings. They have the impression that they "burn black," and know nothing of the becoming brown sunburn which English girls like to get.

class there is an American organ or "scraphine," and the girls are gener-In most Boer houses of the better to push away the barn.

Thomas Carey, of Palmyra, has returned from a visit to the Paris Exposition and has brought back with him many valuable mementoes of the great fair. He also "did" England, Ireland and Scotland thoroughly.

At Amherstburg, on Wednesday last, a lad named Orney Smith fell into the river. He was rescued in a very gallant manner by another boy, Fred ally able to play simple tunes and accompany songs and hymns. Four girls in one house where the correspondent was staying surprised their visitor by singing the familiar old songs, "In the Gloaming" and "Just Before the Battle, Mother," in preference to Dutch songs. As only one emed able to speak English, it was curious to hear the others join in the choruses. The daughter of the house is always the one to bring the customary cup of coffee to the visitors.

At the same house the daughters entertained their visitor in their bedroom by showing her box after box full of elaborate crochet-work, counterpanes, antimacassars, and yards and wards of crocheted lace frillings, which they had made. They are also very clever makers of paper bowers, and many of the parlors and entertaining rooms are freely adorned with colored bunches and festoons of them. In some houses the bedroom walls are adorned with pages from fashionbooks. The ignorance of the Boer girls is sometimes surprising. One old Dutch "frau" quite thought that there were Kaffirs or black people all over the world, and no doubt wondered how the English could get any work done with no servants at command.

CHEESE BISCUITS.—Place ounces of Parmesan cheese and four ounces of pastry bower in a basin, with a little salt and a few grains of cayenne. Rub into this two ounces of butter and make into a stiff dough with the yolk of an egg. Roll the pastry out thinly, cut it into rounds, prick with a fork and bake in a cool oven until crisp. Keep these biscuits in a tin until quite cool.

PRUNE JELLY —Take one quart of prunes stir until soft and mash through colander; half a box of galatine; put in bowl, cover with cold water, let it soak for about five minutes; take a pint and a half of the mashed prunes, add to the gelatine, with three tablespoonfuls of sugar; put on the stove, and let boil for five minutes; pour into jelly moulds and serve with EGGS A LA JOSEPHINE -Boil six eggs twenty minutes. Remove the shells. Separate the yolks without breaking; cut the whites in thin, narrow slices, and mix them with an equal quantity of fine shredded cooked fish and a tablespoonful of parsley. Place the mixture on a platter in a circular or oval ring, and put the yolks in the centre. Set the platter in a steamer to heat the mixture. Make a pint of thick white sauce and our around the edge of the dish.

The popular notion that "fish is a brain food" is a mistake, for eminent physiologists tells us that fish, no more than any other nitrogenous food, contributes to brain growth and development. All nitrogenous foods, such as fish, meat, eggs and so on, repair the waste tissues of the body, but fish is of more importance than the others.

ENGRMOUS CROWD

Attended the Annual Scotch Picnic at Rondeau.

Wood Days' Sport-Lots of Music Five Bands Present.

The annual picnic at Erieau, under the auspices of the Blenheim Scotchmen, was held yesterday and was successful in every respect. All day long the trains kept bringing crowds to the Eau till there was nearly 10,000 people on the ground. Varied amusements had been provided by the energetic committees and the picnickers were all able to pass the time pleasantly. The Urania brought a large crowd from Port Stanley, St. Thomas and London. Quite a number drove down and some sailed from Kingsville and Erie Beach. County Councillor Von-Gunten was early on hand and worked untiringly all day long. Speaking in the evening he said the crowd, though large, was the most orderly ever seen at the Eau, and every Scotchman felt proud of the manner in which the pleasure seekers had all conducted themselves. Everything had been put on the bills, so the people knew just what to do and when to do it. The crowd was liberally disposed and the confectioners were all sold out before confectioners were all sold out before darkness set in.

The athletic contests were good and the crowd were kept back well so that all might see, and everybody was well pleased and well satisfied.
