CURRENT COMMENT

New Year's Resolutions

This is the season that reminds us that we kept our last resolutions at least one day.

After a year of visiting and reporting the women's club meetings one is almost tempted to send in some New Year's resolutions, of which the following would be part: When you arise to make a motion, know what you are going to say; cease, oh, cease the endless discussion about trivial points which don't amount to a row of pins; be on time; don't call your friends by their first names, such as "Fine, Jennie; I agree with you"; if you don't agree with the plan under discussion, speak up and say so, and then forever hold your peace, don't reverse this, as is the custom in Calgary; work for the good of the cause, not for the publicity; and above all, let deeds, not words, be the symbols of your patriotism.

After a year, the spare moments of which have been spent among bridge fiends, certain resolutions loom up: Don't hold post-mortems, they're always harrowing; when you are dummy, don't recount personal experiences or the latest records of your wonderful children, for no one listens, and this is a time when silence is golden; be a good loser and a good winner, neither a grumbler nor a growler.

After a year of economizing in the home trying to make seven sents out of five, still another set of resolutions evolve themselves: First, be glad, it's the best feeling to cope with hard times that there is; take a pride in your Scotch thrift and look always for results; learn to use your hands and, learning, note how many financial difficulties are solved; above all, cultivate a liking for whatever you have to do, that and a sense of humor will see you cheerfully through all the petty worries of a financial stringency.
