Militar Prical Prical States 1.

A letter from Rome states that the Minister of Arms has received a despatch from the Cardinal Secretary of State ordering him to take measures for the defence of the Papal coast, from the Neapolitan to the Tuscan frontier, in consequence of piratical vessels having been observed in the neighbourhood. In compliance with these instructions the minister has sent off four detachments of artillery to strengthen the garrisons of the litteral forts, from Turracina to Port Ercole, and officers to superintend the repairing of these forts, generally dilapidated middle-age towers, and the supplying of them with necessary guns and ammunition. A troop of dragoous has also been sent to furnish the means of rapid communication between the forts, and detachments have been stationed half-way between the capital and the principal points on the coast, to supply the Government with immediate information, in case of any disembarkation of Grzeo-Ressian corsairs, or Italian Republican desperadoes. It may be cally imagined, says the letter, after whahas recently taken place in the neighbourhood of Zarzana, that the latter are the real objects of the Papal Government's fearful solicitude. The naval forces of his Holiness have also been called upon to make a demonstration. The Papal floor termenty composed of two very called upon to make a demonstration. The Papal fleet is merely composed of two very small steamers built in England last year, San Glovanni and Archimedee, armed with four pieces of light cannon each, and the traditional old war brig used as a guard ship at Civita Vecchia.

New Discoveres in Nidever and Nideon Assyrian Excevation Society, relative to the progress of their agent, Mr. Lodus, in Babylonia, it is stated that a new palace has been discovered at Nineveh, which is by far the most magnificent structure hitherto found among the ruins of that ancient capital. Its walls are covered with fine sculptures, every room and passage being devoted to seperate subjects. These sculptures are the cheft d' souvre of Assyrian art. But a part of the palace, including two or three hundred sculptured slabe, has as yet been explored. On one of these slabe is represented, in base relief, a city surrounded by a double wall. Above the various buildings in the city rises a temple, whose second story is supported by pillars which have their bases on the backs of lions and human headed bulls. Another scene represents a lion hunt. The king is in the act of striking a lance into a lion which is springing at his chariot, while seven others, pierced by many arrows, are lying dead and dying on the ground. On another slab is the representation of a bridge with three pointed arches, and on still another one is depicted a park, with an open gate, through which the king may be seen at a distance, hunting lions. The palace is ascertained by the inscriptions found within it, to have belonged to the son of East Haddon.

At Nimrod, it is said that another obelisk has been discovered, which was erected, according to the inscriptions has attained such a degree of perfection, that names of nearly all the Assyrian Kings mentioned in the bible have been identified—axtending the chronology of Assyrian to a period of about twe thousand years before Christ.

A PORTRAIT.

A young man wishing to be noticed in the gay circles of the world, buys an old watch for five dollars. At the end of four months, finding it it does not keep time as well as a new one, he pays three dollars to have it thoroughly repaired. Two months after, finding it is not exactly a new watch, he pays two dollars for further repairs. At the end of the year, growing sick of it, he swaps it for an old musket. He then tries to get rich by hunting, but not finding game very plenty, and receiving a summons from the merchant to pay for his powder and shot, which has amounted to eight dollars, he says to himself [71] get rid of the rotten musket do somehow; so he swaps it for an old horse and pays five dollars to boot. He hirse his horse keeping has amounted to forty dollars, and his own to seventy-five. He says to himself, this is not exactly delicated to be supplied to the rotten of the year his bill for horse keeping has amounted to forty dollars, and his own to seventy-five. He says to himself, this is not exactly delicated to be a barrel of brandy, which finishes his earthly correct.—Country Gentleman.

day Despatch says of this medicine:

"We feel convinced, that in the use of the German Bitters the patient does not become debilitated, but constantly gains strength and vigor to the frame—a fact worthy of great consideration. The Bitters are pleasant in taste and in smell, and can be administered under any circumstances, to the most delicate atomach. Indeed they can be used by all persons with the most perfect affety. It would be well for those who are much affected in the nervous system, to commence with one teaspoonful or less, and gradually increase. We speak from experience, and are, of course, a proper judge. The press far and wide, have united in recommending the German Bittern, and to the afflicted we most condially advise their use."
