THE CHAMPION THIEF, The Times correspondent of the London Globe says: "Last week a certain Hungarian Countess, well known for her riches and beauty, the same spirituelle lady who last year seconded her husband in a duel, traced with her presence the performance of the Press, or swamher theatre."

On one of her late fingers in lady, wore two splendid diamond rings exactly like each other, having an emerald set in the middle of the finger. Her box was full of organs, liveries, six feet of the finest flunke imaginable. Quoth he, in fine Hungarian, "My mistress, Princess P., has sent me to be in your ring for five minutes."

Her Highness has observed the from her box opposite, and more closely, as she wishes have one made after the pattern. Without an instant hesitation the Countess handed a ring to James, who bowed with respectful dignity and tired. The performance of the two great ladies met on the staircase, and the Countess begged her friend to keep the ring at her convenience. "Wh ring, my dear? Denouement Tableau! The powdered pinal was no flunkey at all, but thief, and the ring was gone. The police were informed of impudent trick. Justice seemed to have overtaken the culprit in a very few strides, for in the morning the Countess, who still in robe-de-chambre, received a letter informing her that the thief had been caught at the ring found on his person. "Only," added the note, "man stoutly denies the charge and declares the ring to be his own. To clear up all doubt pray come at once to the police station or send the duplicate ring by bearer." To draw a second ring from the finger as a makeshift joyfully to the man of a fine fellow in police uniform—together with a handsome tip—for the glorious news was the work of a moment. "Only when my lady-hour later betook herself radius to the police station to recover her jewels, a slight mistake came to light. Well, my rings? could not come myself the instant I got your letter." "Well, madame?" Denouement Tableau No. 2. The thief had got them both.

MILTON REVIEWED, A mining camp editor of Bodie recently received from San Francisco bookdealer a copy of Milton's "Paradise Lost."

"More new hooks to review he sighed, taking out his tobacco knife and cutting the leaf. Thereupon he wrote the following paragraph: "We have just received a copy of John Milton's poems from the enterprising publishing house of X. N., San Francisco. The book opens with a long yarn, 'Paradise Lost'."
