Marriott was recommended to the local club by the Detroit players who played on the London team last season, and the management lost no time in getting him—signed up. Ananias Is a George Washington Compared to the London Free Press

It has long been suspected that the London Free Press has openly avoided the truth where a lie would serve to put itself in a less unfavorable position, and that these suspicions are correct, is proved by the following, which was printed on the sporting page of the Free Press and sporting page of the Free Press, and which purports to be an account of The Advertiser-Free Press hockey game at the Westminster rink on Wednesday afternoon:

The complete change of affairs in the last half of the game certainly discouraged the Berlin supporters, but they will have to doff their hats to the great little Canoe Club team, who were superior to their team at every point.

When the Free Press issued a challenge to The Advertiser to play a game of hockey, The Advertiser believed that its Richmond street contemporary had at last a couple of hockey players. If the true state of affairs had been known The Advertiser would have played one man against the whole Free Press seven and then made a ten-to-one bet on the one man. And then to cap the climax, the Free

And then to cap the climax, the Free Press comes out with a deliberate lie about the whole matter. It is a pretty small thing to lie about a hockey game, but the Free Press sporting editor evidently stoops to the small, mean, contemptible, little things.

The game is creating a great deal of interest in Detroit, and the papers of that city have been running pictures of the London players in their editions this week. In the Detroit News this morning appears the pictures of Crow Carruthers, Jimmy Orr and Kenny Castelman.
