Tuesday afternoon, while sailing at a rapid speed, at a height of 500 feet, Victor Carlstrom, the aviator who is making a flight from Queen's Park daily, felt something go wrong with the engine of his aeroplane and the eraft start to rock

At that time he was over a thicklyhoused section of the city, where it would be madness to attempt to land. Far ahead to the northeast he saw a smooth tract of land and immediately shutting off his engines volplaned towards it. Several times the machine borched badly, and appeared about to capsize. The machine finally reached Oxford street, just north of Carling's Heights, at a distance of 50 feet from the ground, still volplaning.

Landed Safely. The speciators became alarmed. Would the machine strike some of the tall talk of his experiences to a newspaper-trees in that section or the roofs of the man. He could not be located at the houses? That was the thought on every grounds last night.
