Mr. Gray stepped forward and was greeted with cheers. This was not his first appearance on the platform on which he stood. In 1878 he had, in speaking here, stood. In 1878 he had, in speaking here, observed that the theory of protection was rapidly ceasing to be a sectional issue, and was becoming a well-understood national question. He paid a high tribute to Sir John A. Macdonald for the part he had played in the inception of the national policy. The effect of protection would be the building up of home manufacturers, home labor and home capital against the interests of foreign nations. When the foreign manufacturer had to compete with home industry he cut down the When the foreign manufacturer had to compete with home industry he cut down the wages of his labor, perfected his machinery and sold his goods below cost in order to crush out the home manufactories. When these were crushed out and they had a monopoly of the market, they raised the price of manufactured goods and we had to pay for it. If we had protection the foreign manufacturer had to lower the price manufactures of the United States in the last year was $4,400,000,000, while those of England were only $3,700,000,000. In addition to this the United States agricultural products amounted to $3 000,000,000, compared wieh which those of England were insignificant. Not only this, but compare the condition of the masses in the protected country with those of the free trade country!

cial panic that upset the whole business of the country.

It was all ged by the grits that the prosperity was not connected with the N.P. Prosperity, they claimed, was due to the increased imports of agricultural products. This could not be so since these had only increased little over $1,000,000 under the N. P. regime.

The boundary question was dealt with exhaustively, and was declared merely a scheme of the opposition to rouse the passions and prejudices for the coming election. Passions were not the things to appeal to, but sober, thoughtful intelligence. The cry of the grits (whom he called radicals) over the streams bill was merely for election purposes. Had the government acted otherwise than the way they did they would have been guilty of confiscation. The Northwest land and railway policy was spoken of and defended by the speaker, who compared its terms very favorably with the terms the Mackenzie government went begging after. OBITUARY.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, June 15—Wm. Dennison, ex-governor of Ohio, died this morning, aged 67. He was postmaster-general under Lincoln and Johnson.

They are both solid, well-built men, blondes, and of affable address. Not only are they both Johns, but they have the same surname. But one is known best to the business section of the community, while the other is known to the people and especicially to the residents of St John's ward. The first devotes his energy to business; the latter to politics and being of the some name they are often "mixed" even by their friends. Outside of their vocation another difference is that one is an American and the other a north of Ireland "mon." To distinguish them the common and respective

This worthy still attends the election meetings in St. John's ward, and mow, besides the ton of dynamite that havays carries under his arm, he has a copy of The World in his pocket, describing him as a campaign crank. He reads it to everyone. It seems he tackled sir John lately and wanted to be made fog inspector for the lower lakes:

WHAT HE COULD DO FOR HIM. A recent graduate of Toronto university, up in Algoma for the past week, came down lat night. While there he told no one his business, but merely "looked around." One citizen of Killarney approached him with a knowing wink and said: "Are you up here on elections? I can control twenty votes."
