THE MONTREAL REBELLION SCARE: Becember 1837.

BY JOHN FRANKS, MONTRALL There was a sound, but not of revelry, through the dark and narrow streets of old through the dark and herrow streets of old Montreal on the night of the 13th of December, 1887.

It was the sound of armed men mustering and hurrying in wild confusion and under the confusion and un and nurrying and transfer and under fearful excitement, all concentrating to a rallying point—the old Champ de Mars, In the early morning of that eventful day Sir John Colborne, the commander in-chief, started from Montreal on his march, with about 2,000 men; to disperse the rebel force about 2,000 they are applied who redel force encamped at the village of St. Eustache, some twenty miles to the north in The whole northern district was then in open rebellion. The ern district was their in open receition. The city had been left almost entirely under the protection of the volunteer force. Such of the citizens who were on the street Such of the citizens who were on the street about eight o'clock that night would have seen a horseman, one of the Lachine Troop of Cavalry, so well known by their fierce look-Cavairy, so wen anowa by their herce looking bear skin helmets, dashing along our streets at a mad gallop. The guard at the city gate at Dow's brewery was no hindrance to his wild speed, the crossed bayonets of the to his which speed, and thousand bayoness of the four sentries posted there were cleared at a bound. His uniform being known to the saved him from a passing Then idown old St. Joseph sentries and Notre Dame streets, at the same wild pace, to the Main Guard, which stood nearly in front of the present

Court House, and there delivered his verbal despatch from Major Penner, commanding officer at Lachine, to the efficer of the day in command at Montreal, nearly as follows:
The tenels have escaped from St. Eustache and are reported advancing in force ion "Lachine to capture the arms stored there for the frontier volunteers." This despatch was delivered at the Main Guard within thirty minutes after the trooper had mounted his horse at Lachine. The distance being his horse at Lachine. The distance being over eight miles.

Then there was wild hurrying on the streets of Montreal. "To arms?" was the cry; "the rebels are at hand." The alarm bells rang—the news flew like lightning, reaching every nook and corner of the city in a few minutes. The city was confined within small limits at that time. Few of the young consteers of that day are now living. The volunteers of that day are now living. The volunteers of that day are now living. The wild excitement of that night can never be forgotten by the living ones. There were harried mountings of staff officers and orderlies. Women and children were "Cryand and Clamorand" on the streets. All was uproar and disorder, but amid this disorder and uproar there was method, pre-arranged, to meet any such emergency.

The raliving words were—every man to his post, the headquarters of his company or regiment, and within the space of two hours nearly 4,000 armed men-volunteers, old and young, merchants, professional men, clerks, mechanics and labourers, atood side by side in their ranks-shoulder to shoulder, a solid mass of living valour, ready to do their duty. It was a grand sight to see the mustering squads falling in and taking up their double-quick murch to the rallying point, with bugles blowing and drams beating announce ing their approach, but it is regretable now to think that so dire a necessity ever existed in our country. The different regiments took up their line of march to the outskirts of the city, and proceeded as far as the top of the Tanneries Hill, the high road to Lachine, waiting orders from the front to direct their onward course.

The alarm had reached Lachine about seven o'clock. A French-Cauadian loyalist, Paul Lebert, living near St. Genevieve, brought the report of the supposed rebel advance on Lachine. Major Penner immediately sent orders to the captains of the four companies of in the Province. Word having been sent over to Caughnawaga, about two hundred Indian Warriors crossed the river and joined the Brigade.

By the advice of old Colonel Wilgress, a Peninsular veteran, then living at Lachine, who undertook or assumed the direction of affa rs, the Lachine troop and the village company of foot (Captain Leponsee's) were was with this company. They came in at double quick, neurly a run, and formed op posite Laflamme's. Such a cheer as greeted their arrival, it rent the very air. Then Captain Carmichael, with his company from Captain Charles' company, from Cote St. Pierre and the Tanneries, arrived and formed in Caughnawaga was on the river crossing to fluence to save Riel from the gallows. join the Lachine Brigade.

The cheer of welcome from that little band of volunteers which greeted the arrival of the Indian warriors, and their wild warwhoop in response, was a sound, a sight and a scone; the like of it may never again be heard or seen in this province! By ten o'clock fully Zelandia arrived at 11 a.m., having on board 500 armed men of all classes stood in the old Maxwell, the alleged murderer of Preller in a village of Lachine. The night passed over St. Louis hotel. Maxwell positively refused without any enemy putting in an appearance. There were no telegraphs in those days. All crime with which he is charged, saying communication was made and kept up by the cavalry. The Lachine troop was then overworked, carrying despatches and keeping up the lines of communication between the out. He looks cheerful and says he never felt

It was a grand sight to see the Lachine Troop with their bearskin helmets and the four companies of foot form line, 300 men; with their old Major in front thanking his "boys" as he called them, and also thanking the Indians for having turned so well and so loyally. The roll was then called; cheer after cheer went up as boys and grey-headed.

Maxwell was manacled at night, and the two detectives kept six-hour watches over him day and night. Two carriages were in waiting at the steamer landing, and the two dispersions with Maxwell, were driven to the City Prison, where the prisoner will remain after cheer went up as boys and grey-headed. loyally. Peace to their memories!

Thus ended the alarm of the 13th December. The repels were dispersed from St. Eustache and the troubles in Lower Canada ceased for the year 1837.

The following winter passed over quietly. Seed time came and a bountiful harvest crowned the year, but instead of the usual autumn thanksgivings of a grateful people, the standard of rebellion was again raised in November, 1838. Roofless walls and ruined tended to have remained there two or three homes marked its desolating tracks, leaving a dark blot on the pages of oppositions.

RIEL STILL CHEERFUL.

WRITING HIS MEMOIRS-THE OTHER PRI-SONERS AWAITING SENTENCE-POUND-MAKER AND BIG BEAR.

TORONTO, Aug. 11.—The Mail's special from Regins, August 10, says:—Riel professes to have abandoned all hopes of a reprieve, but his conduct belies his words. He continues cheerful, and does not appear to be under the apprehension of death. He is daily attended by priests, and shows great pleasure at having their company, and joins with great fervor in their prayers. He takes exercise once or twice daily in the yard of the police barracks, and the rest of his waking hours he spends in devotions and in writing. It is said that he is preparing his autobio-graphy. The statement of Dr. Clarke and others that a sufficient time was not allowed for a thorough examination of Riel's menta condition is held by many as a sufficient reason for another medical examination. The belief is general that this feeling of a want of thoroughness in the investigation by the slienists had something to do with the jury's recommendation of the prisoner to mercy.

The batch of prisoners who through their counsel pleaded guilty, are awaiting their sentences with apparent spathy. It is more than doubtful if the majority of them understand the crimes with which they are charged foot of the Lachino Brigade to muster their in the legal jargon of the indictment, or the men; some of them had five miles to march in. By ten o'clock every man was in front of the opinion that the majority of the Listanme's hotel, the headquarters of the brigade, presenting a front of two hundred bibility allowed to return home to appear for and torry bayonets and nearly sixty swords men—as fine a body of men as could be found however, that they are mistaken in this view. Those who ought to know best hint that in the cases of many of them 'the sentence will be very severe. Thomas Scott, the alleged white rebel from Prince Albert, and Whitecap, have arrived here.

The interest in the trial of the remaining prisoners is decreasing wonderfully. What-ever little interest is manifeste? is centred in Poundmaker. As regards Big Bear, he is looked upon as of no account. It is said sent to the front or advance, half a mile shove the village, to watch and to report the rebel advance. The three other companies of foot arrived shortly afterwards.
