THE GREAT CAMPAIGN.
IRELAND'S STRUGGLE FOR HOME RULE.

Progress of the Contest in England, Ireland and Scotland; the Leading Events of the Last Week.

The following despatches, according to their dates, tell the story of the mighty political battle now being waged beyond the Atlantic. We cannot convey the news in a more concise manner than by giving the cable despatches for each day since our last issue.

LONDON, June 29.—Mr. Gladstone has about recovered from the effects of his gingerbread adventure at Chester. His eye may yet be a little irritable at times, but not sufficiently so to prevent him from starting on his campaign tour.

His arrival at Edinburgh to-night was made the occasion for a popular outburst of enthusiasm, and a rousing reception was given to the Grand Old Man.

As the train bearing Mr. Gladstone stopped at the various stations along the line, the crowds that had assembled cheered him heartily. At several stations, notably Warrington, Wigan and Preston, addresses were presented to him, which he acknowledged in brief speeches.

EDINBURGH FAVORED BY A MAGNIFICENT SPEECH FROM MR. GLADSTONE.
EDINBURGH, July 1.—Previous to his great speech on Thursday here, Mr. Gladstone, who had been the guest of Lord Rosebery at Dalmeny Park since his arrival in Midlothian, rose early and strolled for hours in the charming grounds of the ancient seat of the Primroses.

Mr. Gladstone looked better and brighter than when he left Hawarden. He seemed to revel in the breeze from the Fifth of Fife and to draw in inspiration with the air of his ancestral Scotland. His eyes improved so rapidly that during the afternoon he dispensed with eye-glasses altogether while preparing the notes for his speech of the evening. He drank a glass of light claret before starting for Edinburgh, and at five o'clock stepped with Mrs. Gladstone into an open carriage and drove off via Granton to a little town in the Fife Highlands where were assembled all the Liberal members of the Liberal Club.

His speech was a masterpiece of clearness and vigor. He spoke with animation and vigor, and his words were impressive and full of meaning. He addressed a large audience, and his words were heard with attention and interest.

THE GOVERNMENT DENOUNCED.
Mr. Gladstone denounced what he called the mean trick of the Government in preventing the pollings from being held on Saturday. It was a trick that showed fear of the working classes, and would recoil upon the heads of its authors.

Lord Salisbury, in his manifesto, denounced the Land League and the leaders in the plan of campaign. Yet in 1883 Lord Salisbury sent Lord Carnarvon to treat with those very leaders. In 1887 he utilized their support in the elections. Did Salisbury believe these leaders tyrants and desperadoes when, in a public speech, he pointedly referred to home rule on the basis of Austria and Hungary? If not, when was Lord Salisbury converted to that view?

...sense of justice, to cast effectual light on the path we ought to pursue, and to lead us through all difficulties and contentions to a happy consummation. In what spirit, he asked, had the educated classes met their proposals? Their conscientious suggestions had been hurled back with mockery. Ranged on one side their opponents declared, were all that was intelligent, all the men of title and of land, and on the other side the poor men who constituted the Irish nation, with their few despised leaders. Who, in this case, had shown liberality of view and a desire to interpret everything in its best sense? Certainly not the titled, the wealthy, the educated classes.

NO TRUST IN PERKS.
Mr. Gladstone proceeded to arraign the Government for its action in Ireland. He denounced the Irish Local Government bill as a measure of expediency and a wanton insult to and mockery of the Irish people.

"Let us go forward," said Mr. Gladstone in his peroration, "in the good work commenced. Let us put our trust not in titles, not in epures, or in peers, or in acres. I will go further and say, not in man, but in Almighty God, who is the God of Justice, who has ordained the principles of right and equity and freedom to be guides and masters of our lives."

Prolonged applause followed the close of the address, the audience repeating the ovation with which they had greeted Mr. Gladstone.

Mr. Gladstone spoke eighty-four minutes without showing any sign of exhaustion in voice or manner. The address is pronounced equal to any he ever delivered in Edinburgh.

ANNIVERSARIES IN JULY.

CARDINAL GIBBONS—Born July 13, 1834.—Into thousands of homes in this land, a little book has gone, on its errand of truth, bringing like an apostle its lessons of Catholic doctrine in its mild, kind, insinuating way, touching the hearts and enlightening the minds.—That book is called "The Faith of Our Fathers." Have you not read it and has it not been as interesting as a story of adventures? How many a non-Catholic has met, in a friend, who led them away by the hand into the Catholic Church? That book was written by a missionary who by it preached to thousands in his North Carolina Missions before he was called to occupy the highest ecclesiastical rank in America, to wear the scarlet of a Roman Cardinal, and preside over the oldest diocese in America, Cardinal Gibbons of Baltimore. What pleasant memories must come to him as he realizes that July 13, 1834, he was born in Baltimore and baptized in the very Cathedral in which he presided over the Third Plenary Council and was invested in the scarlet robes of a Cardinal of the great Catholic Church, and which is his Cathedral as Archbishop of Baltimore. To know him is to love him, and placed as he is near the very heart of our political and national life, his simplicity of life, his power of foresight, his admirable prudence have all combined to make him what might be called a providential man. How well he knows when to speak the right word that puts our Church in such a brilliant light before the American public. How sweet and strong his sympathy for suffering wherever found. How broad his Americanism which finds its best expression in denunciation of political oppression whether in Ireland or among the Jews in Russia. How thoroughly in touch with all that is good in our American life, loving this country and all it stands for, with that unselfish love which only a strong Catholic can have. A friend of labor, his was the voice raised to prevent misrepresentation of the great objects and aims of organized labor. Cardinal Gibbons seems to have been raised up by God for our day and generation to bring American public thought in harmony with the Catholic Church, removing prejudice and gaining friendships which have made his name one of the dearest in our Catholic homes. The Cardinal is a very busy man, yet he finds time to contribute frequently to the great magazines of the country on the important topics of the day. His recent paper in the North American Review for April, on "Patriotism and Politics" should be read by every American. He has also written a most beautiful book called "Our Christian Heritage," which is a fitting companion to his "Faith of Our Fathers." The crowning work of Catholic education in this country, is the Catholic University at Washington and much of its success is due to the persistent zeal of Cardinal Gibbons. How proud then we American Catholics ought to be of our American Cardinal who is such a thorough representative of everything that honors our Church. God grant him many years to lead our Church to highest material prosperity and thus bring into the world many who are true and ignorant idolaters. I. J. C.

NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE, July 4, 1804—May 19, 1864. It is said that when a friend of Hawthorne once asked him to write a story that would be a stimulus from beginning to end, he smiled and said that it would be impossible for him to accomplish such a task, as he would be sure to bring in words across the sunshine and point out a spectral hand amid the scenes of gay merriment. From this answer, the student will at once perceive that the genius of Nathaniel Hawthorne could not be content with happy kindling to produce tales such as they would take great delight in reading. In Hawthorne's mind, passion, intellect and a poet's sense of his words, and a profound knowledge of the human mind, were all combined, and he produced a beautiful, but somewhat fantastic, and as if we have a charm over the pages of America's greatest novelist.

Hawthorne, in a certain sense, was an old man, not only in age, but in the maturity of his mind, when he wrote "The Scarlet Letter," but he was so earnest, so reverent, so taken up with thoughts within, as to be only a man inwardly, to avoid himself with perfect abandon to his outward world, however bright, or gay, or attractive the scene might prove to be to lighter and happier natures.

Yet, notwithstanding the fact that his strength, wisdom, and wit, are the prevalent characteristics of his mind, and that his deep insight into the human heart makes his works more apt to repeat than attract readers from among children, he has written some stories and sketches that ought to bear him to the young, heart. These stories and sketches are to be found in the collection published under the titles, "Grandfather's Chair," "Wonder Book," and "Tanglewood Tales," and the unending verdict of all young folk, who read them, is that they are most interesting and admirable children's books. They will be found the pleasantest kind of an introduction to an author whom one is apt to begin by loving and end by reverencing.

Clifford Blackman
A Boston Boy's Eyesight Saved—Perhaps His Life

By Hood's Sarsaparilla—Blood Poisoned by Canker.

Dear Sir: I have been a grateful mother; for my little boy Clifford, who was 4 years old, had his eyesight nearly lost with blood poisoning by canker. He was treated by the best of physicians, but it was in vain, and he was nearly blind. I was very anxious to find a remedy, and I saw your advertisement for Hood's Sarsaparilla. I bought a bottle, and gave it to him. He has now recovered his eyesight, and is as healthy as ever. I can only say that your Sarsaparilla is a most valuable medicine, and I would recommend it to all who are afflicted with blood poisoning or any other disease of the blood.
