DISAGREEMENT OVER SANCTIONS

CBC: The Commonwealth foreign ministers meeting in Australia can't seem to agree on the question of sanctions against South Africa. Foreign ministers from eight Commonwealth countries have gathered in Canberra. They'll start talks on the issue tomorrow. Jeannette Mathey reports.

REPORTER: The foreign ministers meeting here all agree there has to be continued pressure on South Africa, but they don't agree on what form it should take. Joe Clark says Ottawa wants to focus on making current sanctions more effective. That is, getting other countries to join in applying them.

CLARK: We have a lot of work to do, still to get other strong economies to go as far as we have gone, or in some cases, to get them to respect the measures that we have brought in.

REPORTER: That view is shared by the Australian Foreign Minister Gareth Evans.
