To a cortain oxtent wo can all see that discipline is good for us. What men of business repents him of the time he spont in what appeared to be the sharp discipline of school? Who does not wish that he had more of it and sharper? The time when you strained all your powers, denied yourself all your pleasures, and tied yourself slight to your tasks, is the time which you remember most gratefully; had you your youth over again, you would make that the rule and not the rare exception. Tell me which of you came through childish and youthful follies without some sharp lessons? Who has not been bitterly mortified by the wounding of his self-importance, or heartily laughed at for what he thought very wise and grand? The sharper the lesson the better it served its purpose. Looking back, you would not wish one drop of its bitterness extracted; you would rather that the infusion had been stronger, that it might have killed the weakness at tevry rook. We see, so far, that good comes out of discipline. We do not sit down and cry over it. Hereby you consent to the wisdom of the discipline of God.—Baldwin Brown.

A JESUIT'S OBEDIENCE.

It was, I think, at the little port of the Esquina in Corrientes that he came on board. A priest at first sight, yet not quite similar to other priests. A Spaniard, too, at first sight, with the caucut features of Old Castille, the bony hands that mark the man of action, and feet as square as boxes Withal not commonplace, though mas sanding, but with a look of that intensity of purpose, which many salute have shared with buildogs.

Then the river narrows and all traces of civilization are left behind. Here the Jesuit, for all had now begun to forget to call him nothing else, seemed to brighten up as if he expected something, and his stories of the Jesuits of old times became more frequent.

Little by little his own history came out, for he was not communicative, at least about himself. Near the Laguna do los Xarayas, it appeared that the company of Jesus had socrelly started a mission among the Gusaarayes, said he was of it. Such was the case, for it appeared that the Indians, either tired of missions or bored by preaching, or because they wished to kill a white man, had risen some months ago and burned his church and buildings, killed the priests with exception of our passenger, and returned to wander in the fore ".a. and the indians will find some other pastors more successful though none more salf-devoted." Every one on board protested, and the little man smiled as he informed us that he

Next day, after much protestation from the Captain, the steamer stopped at a sort of clearing in the forest, lowered a bont, and the Jeanit went ashore, in nowapaper well filled with eigenstees. Stepping ashore he stood for an instant, a little figure in rusty black, a midget against the giant trees, a speck against the giant eggestion. The steamer pulled and snorted and swing into the steamer the Jeanit waved his hand, took up his newspaper of cigarettes, and, as the passengers and craw stood staring at him from the decks and rigging, walked into the forest.
