"Go to it, boys," was his advice.
"Some day you'll learn better. Women are all right as parlor decorations and to consume surplus cash in candy and clothes, but as for me—well, I'm going to buy myself a farm some day, where I can have horses, dogs and cows and chickens. They're of some use in the world and they don't so hack on you world, and they don't go back on you when you're down and out."

Naturally the others resented these outbursts. They defended the fair sex valiantly, and by sheer numbers forced Big Bruce to desist from his oral at-

Sunday was a day of rest in the woods as well as the places where civilization reigned, and also it was a day when a great deal of letter writing was accomplished in "Lover's Lodge." which Big Bruce sarcastically christened the shanty where the surveyors were making their headquarters.

On one of these Sundays Bruce set out on a hike which he called a "relief expedition."

"I'm going to get relief from the perfumed air of this shack," he anounced as he took an old walking-stick he had carved from a tree branch, a package of sandwiches and a sanitary cup.
"Here's hoping you all get married and attitle days to blissful contentment—no settle down to blissful contentment—no excitement, no pleasure, no nothing," and he strode disdainfully from the shack into the woods.

It was not a case of envy with Big Bruce. He could have been admired by many girls had he chosen, for he was a good, healthy, handsome specimen, who looked well either in ballroom or backwoods. However, Big Bruce had not met the right sort of woman.

His mother died when he was a tod-dien and when he grew up his father's not met the right sort of woman.

His mother died when he was a todder, and when he grew up his father's financial standing threw him in with a lot of society buds who had no mission in life other than to look beautiful, sip iced drinks and play bridge. No, women held no interest for him. They were to him, as he had said, mere ornaments or pley things, and not to be given con-to him, as he had said, here of harders or plevthings, and not to be given consider, ion in a serious, busy world.

Big Gruce drew his lungs full of pure air as he swung along the ridge, heading for Lake Crescent, where he knew a flat-bottomed rowboat was drawn up a flat-bottomed rowboat was drawn up a flat-bottomed rowboat was drawn up on shore. It was well along in summer and vegetation was in full bloom, with birds chirping in the trees and insects buzzing merrily—and some of them stinging just as merrily.

Bruce expelled clouds of pungent tobacco smoke, drawn from a venerable pipe, and hummed a tune. He was enjoying himself immensely.

Getting into the rowboat, he pro-

Arriving on the other side, he drew the craft up on shore and continued his wanderings.

Suddenly, while walking along enjoying the solitude of the woods and thinkof his foolish friends back in "Lover's Lodge," he felt a sharp, piercing pain in his right side. At the same instant the report of a rifle echoed through the forest. Big Bruce tumbled in a heap on the ground and almost lost consciousness.

For moments that seemed like hours the young man lay there helpless, the pain growing more intense all the while. With an effort he reached his left hand to the wound and withdrew it covered with blood. He felt nauseationed the swam before his ed, and black dots swam before his

With the knowledge that help was at hand, Big Bruce drifted into unconsciousness. When his eyes opened some took a pair of later, he looked up into a pair of black ones, which were owned by a gir of about twenty, who was garbed in well-fitting buckskin clothes, with a

She smorted in disgust. An examination with his hands showed Bruce that his shirt had been cut away around the wound and a bandage put in place. The bandage was wet, but he ascertained that it was with water instead of blood. "It's not serious—if I hurry you home." she told him, in businesslike tones. "If you'll try to walk, and lean on me all you want to, we can make it to the canoe."

It was growing dusk, but Big Bruce could see that there were white caps on the lake. He doubted the girl's ability the lake. He doubted the girl's ability to paddle through the savage waves, but he kept his own counsel.

However, she worked like a Trojan, never uttering a word, and despite the fact that it was now so dark the shore on either side was blotted out, she seemed confident of being able to reach her destiration, wherever it might be.

At last they landed, and the girl surprised Bruce by dragging the canoet clear of the water with him in it, almost tipping him out.

"There," she breathed, rather heavily.
"Now for the car."

She left him, and presently a flood of light from the spotlight of an auto surprounded him. Again she aided him to

Half an hour later Bruce was in bed, a fresh bandage over the wound, the girl's brother having come to help look after the patient.

Three weeks later Big Bruce was back in "Lover's Lodge," practically recovered from his wound.
One day one of the boys came tearing into the shack with a packet of mail in one hand and a lone letter in the other.

Bruce took the letter, his face blazing, and retired to his bunk. The others gathered round and looked on in open-mouthed astonishment while he read to himself, smiling the while.

Getting into the rowboat, he propelled it across the lake, which was about two miles wide and five miles long. A stiff breeze ruffled the water into choppy waves, but Big Bruce's strong arms drove the scow through them without noticing the resistance. Arriving on the other side, he drew the craft up on shore and continued his Chicago. Sept. 5.—With the Chicago steam six and a half games in the lead. The chiqago White Sox and the Cleveland Indians were ready to open a hit ree-game series which will have an important bearing on the final outcome of the race for the American League pennant. Both clubs were idle yesterday, and the rival managers said today that their men were ready stored to the opening battle.

Manager Gleason of the Sox announced that both his pitching stars, clicotte and Williams, were ready after long rests. Dick Kerr, who has been showing to good advantage in his recent starts, probably will draw the Sox and the Tigers win their games.

There would be feasting and joyful gatherings all that day, but for her it would be a time of loneliness. Nobody would think of asking her to join their party that day.

"I—I beg your pardon," a voice said just above her ear and she turned so quickly that an old plate slid out of her hand and crashed on the rough pine floor. She looked up into the flushing face of the medical officer.

"I hope that you won't think me presumptuous, Miss Guilford. I—I've hunted all over the place for you.
