Love! Love! Infinita Love! The lowly lady of grace Bows underneath the o'ershadowing Dove, Her eternal Son to embrace! For God is there, the ancient of Days. An Infant of human years: Whilst around them incessantly gaze And nature is wrapt in tears!

Peace! Peace! Infinite Peace! A Golden House hath it found, Whose ineffable beauty must ever increase With immortality crown'd!

The Fireside.

The Gold Repeater; or A Tale of the Christmas Tree.

I was just seventeen years old -so did Mas ter Hammerlein narrate a story of his life-I wa put to my uncle to learn a business, and I had no greater wish than a real punctual pocket-watch such as my companions had. This, thought I would be the first sign of manhood when one can tell himself the time of day. Also I thought further, one ought, at the age when real earnestness of existence commences, to be taught to take special heed to time, for time is the most precious of all possessions if man makes a diligent use of it. A watch in the pocket has a great tendency to beget a punctual and careful employment of time.

Christmas-day was at hand. I was old enough to know that the holy Christ does not come flying through the air in a literal sense, bringing with him all manner of presents, but that the Lord is the inward love and the Good Spirit in the hearts of his subjects who quietly and privately think how they may make one another happy and merry. How delightful all goes on as each seeks to overhear the hidden wish of another, and cannot be firm enough to keep his own secret, and yet is again full of joy to work and vers in the air of the house.

I desired nothing more earnestly than that some one might give me a watch on Christmas night; but I let not a single person see the least signs of my wish. Not even to my beloved sister Minna did I even say a word of it. If, however, the conversation only turned upon a watch, I trembled with excitement; and if I was casually asked, " What o'clock is it?" I felt quite ill. My anxiety must have betrayed me; for hear what happened. One afternoon, as I was entering the parlour and stood on the threshold, I heard my father call to my mother, "Wife, be quick and put away Adam's gold repeater." He quickly folded something in paper, and laid it aside. My niother looked anxiously out, but I made as if I had seen and heard nothing, and was greatly pleased. From that time I walked proudly through the streets, and thought everbody must be looking at me, for whom such a golden future was in store. I was sorry that folks wore watches in the pecket so concealed, and not openly before all the world; and, so easily we are carried away

Every one who can afford it and can take care has fixed from eternity; and men can do no more than set up staves for aundials, the shadow of which truly marks the position of the universal everlasting Light. This is also a symbol and the stave of the canal heard a groun and looked around to see where it came from. "Why are you there, illustration of our whole inward life. This I have learnt now, but formerly I had very different ideas of life. I often stood before the watekmaker's stall, and once changed my pen-knife into the right waistcoat-pocket, that the left might be ready for something better. "Where to myself. "Then there is inside and outsidea double tick-tick." I dreamed once my gold repeater was stolen, and when I woke, very glad was I that I had not yet received it. I could not refrain from sharing with my playfellows what died of a painful and sudden disease, made me so happy. I told them however, not the son of an elder in the church, the when I should show them something that moved guess what I meant.

Now were eyes and ears attentive to me! rs opened, the children streamed in, and then stood fixed in surprise. My heart beat terribly. Verily there lay a watch for me on the -but, ah, me ! it was a silver one. My pleasure was considerably cooled; but I calmed myself, and thought, " That is no harm-silver is whiter and thicker-and then it surely repeats handle, but it would not give way, nor did it strike at all. Now a fearfol sorrow overcame me; "It is all nothing." I laid down the watch quietly, rushed out of the room, ran up to my wn dark bed-room, and wept and complained as if my heart would break. The thought shot through my mind that I would fly quite away, because I had not got the gold repeater; and I again wept over my young life, as if I was about to die, because all my hones were blighted Ma cause all my hopes were blighted. My mother soon came with a light; and when I well, then, I can say, 'Thy will be done.'

"Well, then, I can say, 'Thy will be done.'

I wish, mother, you and safer M. would sing that sweet hymn with me."

Meanwhile, I have learnt thoroughly to comself the moral of this story. If I see a man who to eternity.-[Tract Journal. is really happy with nothing that happens to him because he beholds nothing grander, I thinkah! he has also hoped for a gold repeater!

I am about a business, and am vexed that it does not result as I hoped, I say to myself. "What! is the gold repeater always in my head?"

If I see a person who vainly aspires to rise high in the State, and takes it in dudgeon that he must spend his life in an inferior position, I am ready to call out to him, ' There-leave off pressing the handle—it will never go bimbam.

Be happy with a simple position." Do I observe a young married pair who anticipated one eternal honeymoon through life, and do not

The Boy at the Dyke.

A little boy in Holland was returning one night from a village to which he had been sent by his father on an errand, when he noticed the rater trickling through a narrow opening in the dyke. He stopped and thought what the con-sequence would be if the hole was not closed. He knew, for he had often heard his father tell. the sad disasters which happened from such 210 small beginnings; how, in a few hours, the opening would become bigger and bigger, and let in the mighty mass of waters pressing on the dyke, until the whole defence being washed away, the rolling, dashing, angry waters would sweep on to the next village, destroying life and property, and everything in its way. Should be run home and alarm the villagers, it would be dark before by vanity, that I said to myself, it would be they could arrive, and the hole might even then be so large as to defy all attempts to close it. Prompted by these thoughts, he seated himself | dol on the banks of the canal, stopped the opening with his hand, and patiently waited the approach Every one who can afford it and can take care offit has a watch of his own in his pocket, and he regulates and sets it from time to time by the great clock in the church-tower, and the church-tower, eat clock in the church-tower, and the church-one is regulated by the sun, whose course God but stoutly pressing his hand against the dangermy child?" he asked, seeing the boy, and surprised at his strange position. "I am keeping back the water, sir, and saving the village from being drowned," answered the child, with lips so benumbed with cold, that he could scarcely speak. The astonished minister relieved the box the heart is, there the watch is carried," said I threstened bundreds of lives was prevented.

A Lost Lifetime.

A few days ago, a young man in my parish died of a painful and sudden disease. He was all, but in the manner of a riddle, that on Christ-mas-day they would open both eyes and ears and of a retiring spirit, he was courteous to all, when I should show them something that moved and spoke of itself. I left off before they could About two weeks before his death, he communicated to his mother his determination to become a christian, and the announcement caused a joy The holy evening arrived, and lighted up its in that mother's heart to which it had been a joy candles. When at length the two foldingcouraged this young man to be leve that he should recover, and his decision became more settled. but alas! his disease took a course not pated, and in about ten days after his profession his case was acknowledged to be hopless. His extremities became cold, and the physician reis whiter and thicker—and then it surely repeats marked that unless these could become wirm, bim bam." I pressed with all my might on the and the circulation of the blood be restored, it was useless to hope. Every effort which a most loving mother could exert, and an attached sister could propose, was made to restore circula-tion, but after nearly an hour of cesseless struggle, nothing was effected. The physician entered. "Well, doctor, they have been making me and looked on me with these true, dear eyes, This was done, and, with a clear voice, he which seem always still open upon me, though joined them. But a gloomy thought now visited she has been long in her grave. Then she showed him, and an hour or two after, in the silence of me my error. I should have been content with the room, he was heard to say, "Lost! lost! a simple watch, if I had known nothing of a gold lost!" This surprised the mother, and caused repeater. ever too cold out of bed, so I lay down again.

How often are wicked actions hindered only through very little circumstances, and how little ground, therefore, have we to be proud of our little in the latest of t lifetime! Even to a christian it is like offer Tired of weeping and excitement, I soon slept you a house, and robbing it of its furniture, and soundly; and next morning when I awoke, I taking away your mother, father, sisters, and all rejoiced that my watch went so lastily tick-tick.
For eight days I avoided my companions—tary, and rutting, in the places of all these, the without any need, for they had soon forgotten ghosts of past sine sighing through those empty my boasting. I carried that watch long about me without showing it to any one, but was pleating to die! Take care, young men, if you would than to die! Take care, young men, if you would sed with it myself. Forty years are gone since that Christmas night. Here is the watch, and it if you would not in sorrow cry out, because of lost lifetime, "Oh, my God, take me not away in the midst of my days," then be careful of the prehend my mother's words, and to find for my- hours and days lost to yourself and to Chris' and one eternal honeymeon through life, and do not find it so, since the heaven is no more of festival music, but a common work-a-day life has come, and who therefore tense each other and quarrel, then I quietly reflect... Oh! that they could but forget the gol! repeater!"

In short, in a thousand incidents I have learnt by this story. May not most men discover themselves in it who are unhappy because things have happened to them very different from their fancy? There is no harm in desiring and aiming at the fullest satisfaction indeed, that will properly excite our powers to action. We must, however, at the same time take heed that we may be able to rejoice, and modestly accept it, even if a far smaller share should fall to our lot.

I am quite content with this watch, and would NOTICE.
