ESCAPED FROM GERMANY.

Two Chums Get "Out of the Jaws of Hunland."

"Out of the Jaws of Hunland" sounds like the title of the sort of book in which we used to revel in the days when we considered G. A. Henry the greatest writer of English romance, with David Kerr a close second. As a matter of fact, it is the tale of the experience of two young Canadians, Corl. Fred McMullen, sniper, and Pte. Jack Evans, bomber, who fell into the hands of the Germans in the spring of 1918, but refused to remain prisoners until the end of the war. McMullen's home is in Toronto, and since his return from the front he has been employed by the Harbor Commission. Before the war Evans was a tiremaker for a firm in Oshawa, but since his return from Germany he has prospered in the business world. He discovered his ability to speak and read several months he has been addressing audiences in various parts of the United States, telling them his experiences and giving them an opportunity to meet a Canadian who has done something in the war. That fact ought to be cheering news for people in this country who will tell you that we have been represented too largely in the United States by men who have made their overseas journeys merely to England or with Cook's tours of the front, and whose war experience has been little more than a prolonged orgy of listening to themselves talk.

This book of adventure has been put together in rather an unusual manner. It is not a joint story. Each man tells his own adventures, and pieces of their experiences are run alternately. As a matter of fact, they worked quite independently in getting away from the Germans. As they say in the introduction of the book: "One of the funny things about it is that we enlisted about the same time, in the same battalion, went through about the same training, were captured on the same day, within a quarter of a mile of the same spot in the same line, were examined in the same railway station, one of us in a room above, the other below, at about the same time; were at different times in the same prison camps, even occupied the same cell when they brought either one of us back, after trying to make a getaway of it; got away, the last time, within a few days of each other and, though starting in different German provinces, hit the Holland border and got over the line at nearly the same spot. All this happened, and yet, till we met each other incidentally in old Gravesend in England, neither of us had any idea the other was anywhere but scrapping it out back in the trenches with the rest of the C.M.F. boys. Since then we have been mighty good pals."

Both men tell their story in an easy conversational manner. They talk "Canadian"—that is, the easy colloquial English which boys learn to speak in our public schools. They are an observing pair of writers, and give a clear impression of what they saw and endured in Germany. They make it evident that life in a German prison camp was no bed of roses, but they do not emphasize their sufferings unduly. They claim that, thanks to the Red Cross parcels which always came through to them, seldom being stolen, they were frequently better fed than the Germans, either the guards or the civilians. Their captors looked with envious eyes on their stock of soap and the real boots that they wore.

The story of their various attempts to escape, culminating in success, end in the ninth chapter, and the book is devoted to an account of their impressions of conditions in Germany. From what they saw, these two men are sure that the shortage of food and clothing cannot be exaggerated. They saw that the German soldiers have rations which a British Tommy simply would not endure. These Germans can be bought, at least Corl. McMullen and Pte. Evans judge so from their experience, and they say: "In some ways they were ready to suffer a good deal for the fatherland, but there were mighty few of them who could be won to do anything with the proper bribe." That is a German trait we had not heard about. The authors do some very plain talking for the benefit of Canadian boosters and grumblers. For example, they tell us: "Most people think that a good deal of war work is being done in Canada. Say, if they knew conditions as we saw them in Germany they would think a mighty sight less of it. What would we think, for instance, if not only every man who was at all fit was forced to go to fight, but if every woman was forced to put herself under close registration and to work wherever and at whatever job the authorities saw fit? What would they think if not only the children in their teens but also the little tots of ten and eleven were forced into war work and, entirely aside from any direction by their parents, were put to labor which we would consider much beyond them, and in hours which the men of our laboring class would not stand at all? And yet we saw all this happening right around us in Germany."

Canon Scott.

Canon Scott, who is reported wounded in arms and legs, had a name throughout the Canadian Corps for absolute fearlessness, especially when taking stretcher bearers under fire. He received the D.S.O. recently for going over the top with the battalion which on occasion he took three German prisoners. Once when he was preaching his sermon was interrupted by the explosion of a shell. He calmly remarked he never heard the shell, but thought it might be a friend going to spare him death by a cancer. The men laughed and the sermon was resumed.

GRUMBLING 'BOUT TAXES

The Warton Echo is of the opinion that too much attention is paid to taxes as a cause for grumbling. It says:

In Warton it costs a family of five who use four pounds of butter per week about $2, whereas it cost them five years ago 80c. This makes a difference of $62.40 per year, where the taxes may be about $10 higher for that household. No one hears anything about the cost of butter as enough to drive a man out of town, it is altogether on account of the taxes that it does not pay to live here.

In 1914 if every one in the family got two pairs of boots per year, at $4 per pair, it then cost $40 per year for footwear. Now if they get two pairs it will cost at the least $80, an increase of $40, still the only thing we can find to complain about is the taxes. And so we may go through all the various items of household expenses, which have increased from $500 to $1,000 per year, or higher, according to our pace—still it is the $10 of additional taxes we most talk about. We should give the taxes a rest.

This may be very good logic, but it will not put a stop to grumbling about the taxes. There is a psychological reason for it—in other words, it is in human nature. The reason a man kicks so much about his tax bill is really not that it represents so large an amount of money, but that it means so much money that he doesn't have the fun of spending himself. A man may spend on perfectly useless things, during a twelvemonth, a much larger sum than he pays in taxes, and be quite cheerful about it; but present him with his tax bill, or his bill for church or lodge dues (especially if he is not a regular attendant), or for anything else of the kind, and he will growl about it until he thinks he has got the value of his money in grumbling. It is just the way we humans are built.

Relieves Asthma at Little Expense. Thousands of dollars have been vainly spent upon remedies for asthma and seldom, if ever, with any relief. Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Asthma Remedy, despite its assurance of benefit, costs so little that it is within reach of all. It is the national remedy for asthma, far removed from the class of doubtful and experimental preparations. Your dealer can supply it.

By all means let the farmer in on this collective bargaining program. If he should take it into his head to strike, the rest of it would have to quit as soon as the canned goods gave out.
