MILBURN'S HEART and NERVE PILLS

Oprod Mrs. Edmond Brown, Inwood, Ont. when she had almost given up hope of ever getting well again.

She writes: "I was so run down that I was not able to do my work, was short of breath, had a sour stomach every night and could scarcely eat. My heart palpitated, I had faint and dizzy spells and felt weak and nervous all the time. My husband got me a box of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills but I told him it was no use, that I had given up hope of ever being cured. He however persuaded me to take them and before I had used halt the box I began to feel better. Two boxes made a new woman of me and I have beer well and have been able to do my work ever since."

"Now," said the colonel, "as you two have declined (I hadn't) the commis-sions granted, as you think, under a misapprehension and through the imagination of a young woman, I shall at once recommend you for commis-sions in your own old regiment, and you may be sure that you'll get them.

Copyright, 1901, by John Habberton.

The colonel looked surprised.

I've no more captaincies at my disposal. To make a vacancy for Mc-Twyny I'm going to force a good for nothing captain to resign. But you shall both have lieutenancies—first lieutenancies, if possible."

"In the old regiment?" exclaimed Brainard. "Hurrah!" I echoed. The colonel grasped our hands and almost crushed them in his own. Then he said:

"Meanwhile, on the basis of the com-missions to the Forty-third, I'll have both of you as enlisted men discharged stonce. That will enable you to go home and tell your story, and McTwyny'she came from your town, I believe.
'Twill also enable you to see that imaginative young woman."

Brainard's pale face became a sunburst in an instant. The colonel continued:

"'Twill also enable you to draw your pay, and, as the paymaster is about six months overdue, you'll be able to go home in officers' uniform—shoulder straps and all—eh?"

I looked into Brainard's eyes and saw that the fight with Phil Hamilton

"Give a man an inch, and he'll take an ell, colonel," said Brainard. "Would it be possible to get our papers at once? think it—it might save a life if I ould start for home tonight." "It shall be done. Please say to your captain that I would like to see him." After tattoo, and also after a howling time in our company street, our comrades having learned of our good fortune, we started for Yorktown, 12 miles distant, to catch the morning boat for Fort Monroe. We were in time for the Fort Monroe boat for Baltimore and the morning train for New York. We got officers' uniforms, and

I made it my special business that Brainard's should fit perfectly. He was in such haste to reach Summerton that he would have been content with anything topped with shoulder straps. I even saw to it that he wore sash and sword belt. Meanwhile I prayed that my letter about Brainard might reach Summerton before us.

We did not reach town till long after dark. As our house was on the direct way to Brainard's I suggested that he should stop with me, if only for a mo-ment, and he did not refuse. As we approached the house I was glad to see that it was still lighted. Village people retire early, and I had feared I might have to rouse a sleeping family. On reaching the piazza I tiptoed to the parlor blinds and open window to rec-onnoiter and to increase the pleasure of anticipation. There sat my cousin May, and I was startled at the change that a single year had wrought, for she was no longer a girl, but a vision of womanly beauty. I could have stood there many moments for the joy of gazing at her, but I heard a familiar voice and then saw, at the left of the room, Phil Hamilton. How handsome he was, confound him! Oh, if I could know that my letter about Brainard had reached May! For Hamilton was Quickly 1 drew Brainard after me through the doors and pushed him into the parlor. Hamilton rose quickly, and despite his habitual and superb composure he literally staggered as he saw two of his late brother noncommissioned officers in lieutenant's uniforms. Apparently May had received my letter and been properly affected by it, for, though she turned pale as she rose and looked at us, she quickly became rosy, courtesied to Hamilton and said:

"I like you very much, but here is my answer."

Then she hid the red scar on Brainard's cheek with two red lips. At that moment our dog Rover entered the room and sprang upon me with a joy-ous whine, and as I tried to abate his frenzy of affection I heard Hamilton say:
"Lieutenant Brainard, I esteem it an

Of course we called on McTwyny's Norsh, a rosy, modest, dainty girl who compelled us to recall the story of "Beauty and the Beast." We had not intended to tell her all the details of the fight for the fence, but she extracted them from us, and she shivered, shuddered, cried and laughed. She also kissed us both and commended us to the eternal guardianship of all the saints.

Brainard and May were not married till after the war, by which time Brainard was a brigadier general in a high staff position, and General Grant and many other general officers attended the wedding; so did Phil Hamilton and his wife, who was as handsome and distinguished looking as he; so did Norah and Mick McTwyny, the latter in the uniform of a lieutenant colonel of cavalry. But, as "journeys end with lovers' meeting," this story, too, must

THE END.

An Apple Tree's Roots.

For the purpose of erecting a suitable monument in honor of Roger Williams, the founder of Rhode Island, his private burying ground was searched for himself and wife. It was found that everything had passed into oblivion. The shape of the coffins could be traced only by the carbonaceous matter. The rusted hinges and nails and a round wooden knot remained in one grave, while a single knot of braided hair was found in the other.

Near the graves stood an apple tree. This had sent down two main roots into the very presence of the coffined dead. The larger root, pushing its way to the precise spot occupied by the skull of Roger Williams, had made a turn as if passing around it and followed the direction of the backbone to the hips. Here it divided into two branches, sending one along each leg to the heel, where both turned upward toward the toes. One of these roots formed a slight crook at the knees, which made the whole bear a striking resemblance to the human form.

HINDOU SUPERSTITIONS

Sneezing Is a Bad Omen and Keeps Men From Business.
A resident of Dharmapuri, writing on the subject of Hindoo superstitions, says that a married woman, a dancing girl, a mirror and an ass—the most neglected of the Indian domestic animals—are also among the first objects of good omen which a Hindoo should meet as soon as he wakes from his sleep. A Hindoo does not stir out of his house on any errand, not only during the Rahukalam—an hour and a half a day—but also some time before it. Some do not do any work during Gulikakalum as well-another one hour and a half a day. The cor respondent does not mention that in more advanced countries some people make Rakukalam and Gulikakalum last a great deal longer. Besides these which occurs every day. A particular Natchathiram on a particular day is either good or bad. At times an orthodox Hindoa will not have a "good" day even in a fortnight. Even sneezing is inauspicious. Instances are not rare in which men are prevented from attending their office by sham sneezing. The espying of a male and a female crow together means the ap proaching death of the observer. His fate may be averted by writing a letter to some of his relatives at distance saying that he is dead. The appearance of a rat snake at the right hand side of a journey is considered most lucky. A Hindoo wll never feed a guest for the first time on Sundays, Tuesdays or Thursdays—these days are supposed to bring enmity between the host and the guest. A Hindoo doctor will never administer medicines to his patient, even if he is very dangerously ill, for the first time on any day other than Sunday or Thursday. It is also laid down that a Hindoo should never sleep with his head toward the south— the direction in which Yama, the god of death, is supposed to live. East and west are always preferred.

A CROWDED CITY.

To Walk In Constantinople Is Like a Fierce Struggle.

To walk in Constantinople is like a fierce and active struggle. One should look at once before, behind and underneath one's feet. Some danger or disgust is always threatening. I never walked up the steep read which leads from the bridge to Pera without the feeling that I was fighting my way through a hostile city. A horn blows furiously, and a black man runs up the hill, clearing the way before the dashing and struggling horses of the tram. At the same moment a cab drives at full speed down the hill, and the horses set their feet on the pavement. In front of you a man balances slices of offal on a long pole across his shoulder. They dangle before and behind. He swings cheerfully with his burden through the crowd. A Kurd, stooping under a weight higher than himself, follows, step by step, behind you. Your feet slip in slushy mud and catch on the cobbles or in the gaps of the road.

A dog with a red wound behind his ear and a long strip of mangy skin on his back lies asleep in the middle of the pavement. You step into the road to avoid the dogs and the hamals, and wheels and horses are upon you. You step back into the midst of the dogs and the hamals. As you stand aside fer a moment a beggar with a handless arm rounded into a stump and a woman with her face eaten away in the cavity of the hood which she draws back before you appear suddenly, filling what had seemed the only alley of escape. The sun soaks down into the narrow street. The smell of the mud rises up into your nostrils, mingled with those unknown smells which in Constanting ple seem to ooze upward out of the ground and steam outward from every door and window and pour out of every alley and rise like a cloud out of the breath and sweat and foulness of the people. - Arthur Symons in Harper's Magazine.

Algy Was Not Particular. There was company at tea and little Algernon felt that it was an occasion upon which he might assert himself "Ma," he remarked, holding up his bread and butter in scorn, "can't I have some jam on this?"

"What?" ejaculated his economical mamma. "Jam on butter? No, indeed!

Certainly not!"

"Oh, I don't care about it being on the butter," said Algy calmly. "Put it on the other side."—London Answers.

Why Negroes Can Rear Heat. The function of a negro's black skin is supposed to be the conversion of the sun's light into heat.
