The Husband's Letter.

Dear Kathleen, I'm sitting and sighing And thinking of home and of thee, How I long for my sweet little children, And wish they were now on my knee. Ant gladly I'd have them beside me, To beguile the dull moments of life, I long for their loving caresses And those of my beautiful wife.

But Kathleen, my darling, my wishes At present are futile and vain, They cause me but sorrow and anguish, They make me down-hearted again. But God in His mercy will help us, He knows we are lonely and drear, He knows we would fain be united, Then pray to Him, Kathleen my dear.

And ask Him each night and each morn, To bless your fond husband Tim Dyer, Ask of our Michael and Kautheen To pray for their far distant sire. May God and His good angels guide you And solace and cheer your lone heart, And when we'll again be united, Nought but death shall us ever more part.

Farewell, then, at present, dear!Kathleen, Kiss Michael and Kautheen for me; Tell them I'm pining to see them And join in their froilcsome glee. Remember me kindly to Norah, To father, and mother, and Jim, Good.by. Good-bye once again and write soon to Your faithful, affectionate Tim."

NEWS FROM IRELAND.

DUBLIN.

On the 19th ult. a melancholy case of drowning occurred at the extreme point of the North Wall, Dublin. It appears that a man named John Maher, belonging to Bullock, near Dalkey, has a contract for the supply of stones to the Dublin Ballast Board from Dalkey, which was brought to the point of the wall by little luggers, and while the hands were engaged at dinner on board their lugger, John Hogarty, who resides on Wellington street, Kingstown, invited some of his fellow-workmen to bathe, an invitation which was declined. He proceeded, however, to divest himself of his clothing, and jumped in at a place where there were ten feet of water, and being unable to swim, he was drowned almost immediately. One of his comrades, seeing his danger, stripped and dived after him have weakly to the service of the contract of the seeing his danger, stripped and dived after him have weakly to the service of the contract of the seeing his danger, stripped and dived after him have weakly to the service of the seeing his danger, stripped and dived after him have weakly to the service of the seeing his danger, stripped and dived after him, but was unable to recover him.
