THE FISH INSPECTION ACT

Address by J. J. Cowie J. J. Cowie addressed a meeting in the court house on Saturday evening on the "Pish Inspection Act" passed at the last session of parliament through the efforts of Hon. J. D. Hazen, minister of marine and fisheries. He said the object aimed at by the act was to bring into general use a strong well-made barrel of size for marketing such fish as mackerel raise the general standard of curing and grading the fish so that the cured article may be bought and handled with confidence by dealers and consumers. One of the main reasons why this class of pickled fish, especially herring, bring so reason is to be found in the careless man-

"I thought they were talking rather too men and packers to decide for themselves dition; or whether the late Mrs. Corney was particularly proof against cagle glances; are matters of opinion. The matter of fact is, that the matron was in 1t's very true, you're matron here, my dear; but I thought you mightn't be in the scowl, but, on the contrary, treated it with great disdain, and even raised a laugh thereat, which sounded as though it were genuine.

"You thought they were taking too much! What business is it of yours?"

"It's very true, you're matron here, my dear; but I thought you mightn't be in the way just then."

"I'll tell you what, Mr. Bumble, we don't want any of you interference. You're a great deal too fond of poking your nose into things that don't concern was into the brand will become such a guarantee of quality to the trade that the packer who makes use of it will find his fish in demand while the fish of his neighbour who hesitates to put them under in spection will be neglected.
