Lady Mervile uttered a cry of repug-ance and drew back. "Hush," said Miss Lucas, taking her by the wrist and whisporing in a low rolee. "Be calm. He comes for money. I know his bargain. Off, spare your ojaculations, there is no time for them. I know your bargain with him, and I know that he comes to demand pay-ment."

"Alas! and he must have it!" said Lady Melville.

Lady Melville. "Alas! and he must not." retorted Miss Lucas, mocking her. "Listen. Re-fuse him. When he bullies, like the coward he is, and threatens, like the ruffian that he is, tell him this:" And she whispered in her ear. Lady Melville drew herself up, and the color came hotly, while her eyes flashed.

As the words per ner hips the door opened and the servant admitted Lord Harcourt. Miss Lucas passed him with downcast face as he came forward with his hand outstretched and a conversational: "How do, you do, Lady Melville" But directly she had closed the door his hand dropped to his side before Lady Melville had taken it, and in a suspicious voice he said, sharply: "Who was that?" "Miss Lucas, my companion," said

"Who was that?" "Miss Lucas, my companion," said Lady Melville, drawing herself up. "By what right, however, do you ask?" "Oh!" he said, sinking into the dainty chair, and staring at her. "So you are altered, Leonora. Black does not suit you, or you have grown deucedly old. You look-well, fifty; what have you heer doing?"

"So devoted to the heroics, never losing a chance of practising them. By Heaven! how old you look! Will you sit down."

She sat down and so got a full view of his face. For the life of her she could not refrain from giving him a return thrust.

From Dress Goods Section Lady Melville rose, and the two stood mironting each other. But Lady Melville had the weaker erves—Miss Lucas' were of iron. The mistress of Rivershell qualide be-ire her mistress, and sank back into the air. farthings," she said, quietly." He looked at her—the screen was be-fore her face. "Ah! I expected as much," he said. I thought your folly would cling to you. You want a scene, and this is the commencement; I shall not gratify you. I have come here, my dear Leonora, for a small cheque for that amount, and I shall remain at Rivershall, your guest, until I get it!" "You will remain at Rivershall until I pay you fifty thousand pounds?" "I will. Rivershall is a pretty place. You are a most charming lady. I shall be most happy to become your guest." She lowered the screen suddenly and showed him her resolute face. "Then I am resolved. Lord Harcourt. the tables are turned. It is I who hold the winning cards. You say you will stay here and outrage me and my house until I give you the money you demand. I say that you shall leave this room within an hour in the hands of a police officer." He stared, then laughed.

It shall gore you now.-to death." She rang the bell as sle spoke and a forman answered it. "Request Miss Lucas to step this way." said Lady Melville. Miss Lucas entered immediately, and stood waiting with her hands folded be-fore her and her face serenely demure. "Miss Lucas, you can tell me if the detective whom I employed to investi-gate that affair of the duel is in the vil-lage at the present moment?" "Yes, my lady," said Miss Lucas, tak-ing the cue at once. "He is at the Arms. Shall I send for him?" "Well, not this moment. Lord Har-court may wish to see him. If he should I will ring. You will know what the belg his for and send one of the men to bring him, here instantly." "Yes, my lady," said Miss Lucas, and with respectful composure glided out again. with respectful composure glided out again. Lord Harcourt stood stroking his moustache, his keen, restless eyes glanc-ing from one to the other. When the quiet figure had gone he turned to Lady Melville. "The programme is not quite clear yet," he said. "What do you mean, my dear Leonora? I am not frightened at bugbeers."

dear Leonora? I am not frightened at bugbears." "This is a bugbear in the shape of a gallows," retorted Lady Melville. "Stand back! You are coward enough to strike me; you nearly struck me once, and murdered the man who saved me from your violence." "Ah!" he said, with a short laugh of contempt. "I see where you would have your clumsy arms strike. Yo mean the silly lad I winged on Calais Sands. Poor boy! he fought well; it's almost a pity he had not been a better shot. Murder is a woman's name for an affair of honor."

She clasped it tightly then, and shot have of respect that the governess spoke or listened to her mistress, and she never addressed her without the prefix of "my lady" or "your ladyship."
The gratest stickler for outward respect could not have found a crevice in Miss Lucas' armor of behavior in which to lodge the arrow of complaint; yet all the while the broken-spirited, fearful.earted woman knew that she had taken her quiet companion's yoke and that it was gailing to her soul.
"Did you ring, my lady?"
"Both started: Lord Harcourt fell back, staring at the quiet face and gray eyes of Miss Lucas, who had entered unperceived..."

10 PREVENT CASTORS DROPPING

If you are troubled with having your castors drop, as is the case where you use gas, invert your chair, table, or whatever it may be, run melted sealing wax in the hole, insert the castor, and it will be as substantial as ever.

CARE OF A BROOM.

CARE OF A BROOM. Many housekeepers complain of the short life of the broom, but if the foi-lowing is observed the broom will last a long time and, what is more, will pre-serve its fulness and stiffness; When through sweeping dissolve a handful of salt in a basin of water and dip the broom into it, shaking it out several times. Then stand it up, handle down, and when you wish to use it again you will find it as stiff as a new broom. Never stand your broom up with broom end down if you wish to keep the straws straight.
