Be that as it may, I must say that, on entering the Reading Room and looking over the Island periodicals as they lay on the desk.
I was both surprised and pleased at the improved appearance which "Haszard's Gazette" presented under its new managers both in respect to its general appearance, and the amount of matter which it contained. To say the least, it certainly presents a

Next comes the enquiry, what kind of a literary institution would now be suitable for the Colony? We have common schools to teach the ordinary branches of education, therefore, all studying these branches may be excluded from the Academy or College. In that case, two professors would be sufficient.
