The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

What is there about marriage that makes folks forget they were human o n c e, too?

The pretty little girl with the big married sister wants me to write on that.

She says she's sure that there's lots of young folks like herself who'd be pleased to know why it is that when their sisters and girl friends get married and settle down, no matter how desperately flirtatious, how daintily indiscreet and convention-bating and fun-loving they were before the ceremony, after it they almost invariably develop into Madame Grudies.

She is very plaintive about it.

"It's bad enough when they're first married," she says, "but after the babies begin to come it's worse. Then they're hopeless."

"Before my sister was married, she used to tell me all her love affairs and flirtations and I used to sympathize and be interested, and try to smooth things over when needed. I keep mother from worrying when she came home from canoeing or motoring later than mother liked — and cheer her up and help her out when she got into any silly little scrapes.

"Well, by and by she found the right man and was married and settled down and began to raise a family and in the meantime I grew up and began to have flirtations and love affairs of my own.

"And, of course, at first I took them straight to sister. I thought she'd sympathize with me and help me out when I needed it.

"Did she? Guess not. My dear, she was shocked at the tiniest little things. Instead of helping me out or smoothing things over for me, she was always telling mother that I ought not to do this or that—all things that she did before she was married. Once she was at the house when I came home from a canoe trip an hour later than I expected and instead of telling mother that it took a long while to get the canoe in and the cushions put away, and that the cars are apt to be late, she worried worse than mother did and had mother all worked up.

"And she thinks it's so terrible to be frivolous and wanting to trot about all the time. As if she wasn't twice as bad before she met Jack.

And then, before she was married sister always used to be so ready to stand up for a girl when anyone was running her down. She said one ought always to give a girl the benefit of the doubt unless you absolutely knew something against her. And how she is just as quick to be suspicious, and just as unwilling to believe that a girl is good, in spite of appearances, as anyone.

And she isn't just sister, either. She's such a splendid girl in most ways that I thought maybe that was a saving fault that she had developed to keep her from being too good to live, but when two of the girls that I chummed around with were married and changed the same way, I saw it was just the fatal ceremony.

"Why is it, do you suppose?"

"Does it have to happen, or is there any way of dodging it?"

I wonder.

STOMACH LIVER LUNGS

Each of the chief organs of the body is a link in the Chain of Life. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link, the body no stronger than its weakest organ. If there is weakness of stomach, liver or lungs, there is a weak link in the chain of life which may snap at any time. Often this so-called "weakness" is caused by lack of nutrition, the result of weakness or disease of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. Diseases and weaknesses of the stomach and its allied organs are cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. When the weak or diseased stomach is cured, diseases of other organs which seem remote from the stomach but which have their origin in a diseased condition of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, are cured also.

The strong man has a strong stomach. Take the above recommended "Discovery" and you may have a strong stomach and a strong body.

Given Away.—Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, new revised Edition, is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay expense of mailing 25¢. Send 31 one-cent stamps for the book in paper covers, or 50 stamps for the cloth-bound volume. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N.Y.

Fads and Fashions.

Many of the new coats for girls show a patent leather belt hung low. This seems to be a fashion that holds favor a long time.

Some very attractive dark toned fall gingham and zephyrs have been brought out to meet the requirements of winter indoor wear.

As autumn approaches we are likely to see remarkable combinations of silks and velvets, chiffon and furs, swansdowne and marabout, old-time fringes and ruchings for the latest scarfs.

Considerable variety is shown in the new suit coats. The shorter length is receiving the greater attention, but it is likely that the coats of half and of three-quarter lengths will re-appear later on.

Among the trimmings for fall and winter garments, especially for suits and handsome separate coats of broadcloth, plush, fur fabrics, velvet, cheviot, reversibles and similar fabrics, braids are again prominent.

In the large hats of beaver, felt, velvet, satin and various other suitable fabrics there is a tendency to the large flat hat with a low crown, quite Arcadian in its bent-down side brim and an under trimming at the back.

The sailor collar is making a strong bid for popularity. It appears as a feature of suits of separate coats and of blouses. It differs from the collar of a year ago, since it is cut to fit smoothly across the back without any shoulder extension.

What Makes a King Popular.

Formerly, a King typified divinity on earth; he was God's representative. Now, in England, he typifies humanity on earth; he is man's representative. The more human and manlike he is, the more he represents the ordinary intelligent citizen—what we call "the man in the street"—the greater is his chance of popularity. It is not the presence, but the absence, of any unusual power that endears him to us to-day. Can't's followers in days of yore would have thought more of their monarch if he could have stilled the waves; we moderns would have cheered him because he couldn't. The monarchical helplessness, again, is a trait that specially appeals to us in place of the monarchical power that we adored centuries ago. Formerly, for instance, one could not be rude to a King because he might retaliate; now we must not be rude to him simply because he cannot retaliate. The old feelings of superiority and aloofness have completely vanished, but this does not mean that the monarch has less sway. There were many classes who wished during the last political crisis that Edward the Seventh would break through his rule of impartiality and take command of the situation. Undoubtedly, had he chosen to do so, there were few, in the nation at large, that would have resented his autocracy. — Constance Clyde on "Monarchy in England," in East and West.

King George as a Marksman.

The King as a game shot is the subject of an interesting paper in Fry's for September. King George is declared to be most enthusiastic as a lover of the gun. He has very few equals as a shot in England. His superiors in all-round game shooting in Great Britain could be numbered on the fingers of one hand. It is doubtful if anyone could do much more than hold his own with His Majesty at driven birds. The King is said to be a sportsman first-aid a first rate marksman afterwards. After big shooting parties at Sandringham in his father's time he would set out to tramp through reed beds, mud, and water in search of snipe, wild fowl or outlying game. He enjoys besides shooting, getting plenty of walking. He is a great believer in exercise. He is very mindful of the welfare of keepers, beaters and stop-boys, and when the weather is bad he stops the sport rather than that the men should be subjected to undue hardship. In pheasant shooting at Bayham Abbey the King killed ninety-three at the first standing and eighty-four at the second. His average according to cartridges fired was something like 85 per cent, truly a remarkable accomplishment. The King invariably shoots with the old-fashioned hammer gun instead of with the more generally adopted hammerless pattern. He grasps his gun so that his left hand comes well beyond the fore end, his left arm is practically straight, and his reach is consequently very great. He is thereby able to exert the fullest control over the swing of the barrels in all directions.

The Best Calisthenics.

The champion lady diver of the world, Miss Serene Nord, writes in the August Strand strongly commending swimming and diving combined as an exercise without equal for securing good health, beauty both of complexion and figure. She says:—

"They pull every muscle of the body to its normal limit; not once, but again and again. And, fortunately, they do not jolt the muscles; neither do they build them up on the limbs, on shoulders, or on the back in huge, unsightly bunches. On the contrary, they make for the perfect muscle—the long, pliable muscle which, while it has great strength and power of resistance, is never unsightly.
