CHAPTER XXIV.

"Then the memory of Everest's words, the damning evidence of Conway's note, returned, and I knew not what to think; but on one point I was certain—henceforth life held no duty for me till Gladys was found. Though the golden dream of our joy was ended, though I doubted her, she must be found and cared for.

"I began a search—a search, Stuart that has lasted all my life. By good hap at this time a distant cousin, dying, bequeathed me his property, which, though not large, came like a godsend at the moment, for every available penny I had, had been expended in my search. I was haunted by my wife's pale, horror-stricken face gleaming in the moonlight, by the memory of my baby child, whose prattle had sounded like music in my ears. I knew too well the miseries, the horrors of London; and I could not bear to think that the woman I had held so dear and—Heaven help me!—still treasured in my heart, was thrown into its terrible jaws and left to perish without a helping hand.

"I pray Heaven, Stuart, you may never know the darkness of those days, the unexpressed anguish, the depth of despair! Weeks passed, I could find no trace, and when I was tortured with the conflicting emotions which surged within me an event occurred that put the last stroke to my misery, added the ghastly weight of a wrong to my burden, a wrong which I could never wipe away.

"I had resigned my post at the club, and in my eager restlessness, wandering about the London streets, either alone or with one of my detectives, I was lost even to the remembrance of the frequenters of my old haunts. One day, however, I met a man who had been very friendly with me, and in the course of conversation I would gladly have avoided him if I could—he told me there were several letters awaiting me at the club. None knew where to send them.

"I went for the letters, urged by a wild hope that Gladys might have written. She had it was a letter that is graven on my heart in characters of blood. Heaven give me strength to tell you; for even now, after so many years, I grow faint when I think of it! It was a long, hurriedly-written to the girl, learned her name—Margery Day—and not until she had gone did hope wake in my breast, bringing once more the feeling of eager gladness that I thought dead forever.

"I waited a day or two, but quietly made inquiries, and obtained all the information I wanted; then, having first tested the truth and honesty of your nature, I determined to confide all to you, and claim my child; for that she is my child there is no doubt. But happiness was not to be grasped at once; again fate was unkind. When I made my way to the cottage where Margery lived, it was to find her gone—gone across the sea to Australia. The sudden pain and disappointment aside, I was myself again. Australia was nothing to me; I would start at once, and clasp my child yet in my arms before I died.

"So, Stuart, I leave this in your hands. If I succumb, seek out my Margery and give her her rights. To you I leave all, for I know you will do as I wish; and remember she is your cousin and your equal. Guard her, Stuart, from harm, if it be in your power, and may Heaven bless and reward you for all you may do! It will be necessary to explain how I discovered Margery to be my child. As I told you, I made most minute inquiries, learning all particulars from people both in Chesterham and Hurstley. I sought for Dr. Scott, the medical man who had attended during the railway accident; he had left Chesterham many years before, but he remembered the incident well, and his description of the poor dead woman only confirmed my hopes and fears. Acting upon his advice, I went to Newton, and by dint of money and able men traced my darling's life during two long years of misery. The story of her sufferings, of her daily toil, her heart-broken life, I cannot dwell on. Heaven grant you may never know the terrible agony of hopeless remorse and longing that I am now enduring! Despair seizes me when I remember my madness, her wrong—my angel-wife! Even the joy of finding my child cannot bring me peace. The happiness I experience in the knowledge of her existence is tinged with never-dying bitterness and sorrow, for she recalls her mother.

"But I weary you with my moans, Stuart; let me get on with my story. Gladys then, without a friend in the world—for her aunt would have nothing to say to her, being especially bitter when she learned we were separated—doubted and wronged, had, in addition to her other troubles, the hardship of poverty to face. She struggled to get employment, with little success however; from time to time she managed to make money by teaching, but this never for long. Still through all her trials, her courage never forsook her; she lived for her child. I have spoken with some who knew her in those days; they dwell on her sadness, her sweetness, her innate refinement, little knowing how their words rent my heart. It would be useless to describe the hopelessness, the misery of her life; she parted with her jewelry, and at last in desperation answered an advertisement for a situation as maid.

"Sanitas"

In pre-war days "Sanitas Disinfectant" was well and favourably known in Newfoundland and enjoyed ready sale amongst well informed people. It is again for sale at your Druggists. "Sanitas" is unique amongst disinfectants, because whilst being good for all the usual purposes of a disinfectant, it is recommended for use as a gargle, as a mouth and tooth wash and for offensive breath.

"Sanitas" is positively non-poisonous; for this reason alone, many people prefer it for household use, particularly where there are children or aged persons. "Sanitas" is a safe disinfectant. The odour of "Sanitas" is pleasantly fragrant. "Sanitas" may be used without announcing the fact that there's sickness in your home. "Sanitas" is made by The "Sanitas" Co., of London, Disinfectant Manufacturers to His Majesty the King. A bottle of "Sanitas" costs 35 cents. "Sanitas" is indispensable where personal cleanliness is desired.—Jan 5, 1917

Slaying in India Nets 7 Officials

Bombay, Feb.—Seven officials of the native State of Indore, including the aide-de-camp of the Maharajah himself, whose royal favor proved a curse to the beautiful nautch girl Mumtaz Begum, are under arrest at Indore in connection with the death of her suitor, Abdul Bawla.

Extradition has been asked for the prisoners. Eight arrests previously made here include two step-mothers of the mutilated dancer, her sister and the chauffeur of the late Bawla. Abdul Bawla, wealthy Bombay merchant with whom the beautiful young dancer fell in love when she fled from the luxury she enjoyed as the Maharajah's favorite, was killed in the attack. Lieutenant Seagrave, of the British Royal Engineers, was seriously wounded when he attempted to aid the couple.

Dose of Old-Fashioned Strap

ORDERED BY COURT AS CURE FOR YOUTHFUL THIEF.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 5.—At the direction of Judge Raymond MacNelle, a boy of fifteen, arrested for repeated thefts, was taken to the cellar of the Juvenile Court by his father and given a vigorous old-fashioned thrashing with a strap-to-day. The youth is Joseph Perno, whom Judge MacNelle denounced as a "dressed-up dude with a yellow streak."

He first sentenced the boy to Hingham Reformatory, but on the plea of his father, released and imposed the substitute sentence, directing the father to "take this boy down into the cellar right now and give him a darn good beating with a strap until I can see the marks."
