"I CARE NOT WHAT A MAN'S
CREED IS IF HE LIVES
RIGHT," IS WRONG

So Says a Correspondent; Our Moral Conduct Not Governed
By a Set of Man-Made
Laws

644 Third Avenue, Sunnyvale,
Calgary, Sept. 5th, 1912.
To The Editor, The Morning Albertan:
Sir—I read with considerable interest a quotation in your columns of Wednesday last from an article in "The Churchman" by a "noted church writer."

He remarks in part that a man can not be good unless he is governed by a definite religious code, or creed, and that the quite common remark amongst men that "I care not what a man's creed may be if he only lives right, that is enough for me," is all wrong.

I am rather inclined to believe that our friend is knowingly making this a point of discussion, merely for the sake of creating an apparently forceful argument for publication, making for the basis of his sage conclusions a set of conditions which do not exist and cannot bear the light of logical analysis.

I think that any man who thinks along these lines to any extent will readily agree that our moral conduct is governed not by a set of man-made, but by a set of divine laws, founded on biblical authorities, and distorted and construed one way and the other to suit the narrow minded views and purposes of the numerous religious sects and bodies, but that the same God who created man and teaches a new-born child to draw breath and to cling to its mother for sustenance, when it is yet an infant, directs the child in later years when its brain matures and becomes normal, to discriminate between good and evil.

I may quote the writer's own pointed sentence that "The only creedless man is an idiot," which to me seems strangely inconsistent with and antithetical to his preceding remarks, and strongly bears out my contention.

The human race was not created for religion, but religion to meet the instinctive requirements of the people, an amite in the dark as to the identity of the writer quoted, but I must be excused if I am wrong in stating that as far as I can deduct from that portion of the article quoted, his quite common and not unusual fault of imagination to wander from the paths of sound logic and reasoning.

and to present to the unthinking lay mind, what may on the surface appear to be the same logical conclusions of a man of letters and of strong mind.

A man's "right creed" is in his instinct. Yours very truly,
W. R. GATNER.

MOTHER SAVES BABY'S LIFE
AS BOTH FALL OFF PORCH

Instinct Causes Parent to Hold Body Aloft and This Act May Result in Her Own Death

Mrs. Harry Hannigan, with her baby in her arms, was leaning over the railing of the porch at the residence of Mrs. George Manning, at 211, North Kedzie avenue yesterday when the railing suddenly gave way.

The woman and the child fell twenty feet to the pavement. Instinct, apparently, enabled the mother to save her child's life. As she fell she twisted her body so that when they struck the ground the child was uppermost.

The baby was unhurt. Mrs. Hannigan sustained a concussion of the brain and may die. Her residence is at 243 North Kedzie avenue.

THE COMB'S MORNING STORY
You know the story the comb tells. It's a very discouraging story, too. Day by day, a few more strands are added, of hair that is turning grey, losing its vitality, its strength and its health. Grey hair is as unbecoming as old age. Natural pride should have its own say. You wish to look young and it is your duty to appear so. You can't prevent the grey hair from beginning to show. But "Young Woman" in looks, always. The grey hair belongs to the chaperon and to grandmother.

Stay out of the grandmother class, until your years justify it, by using

THE EVERY-DAY TOMATO
Stewed tomatoes are among the easiest of vegetable dishes to prepare, especially if they are stewed up from poor rather than tasteless or flat rather than faintly acid and agreeable. No addition of an acid—vinegar or lemon juice—will give this most pleasant source.

A teaspoon or a little more of sugar is needed to bring it out, not exactly to sweeten the vegetable, although the sugar does make the tomato milder. No other seasoning except butter, pepper and salt is needed. These are often all that is added, perhaps because the cook does not realize what an improvement is made by the sugar. Our grandmothers always are good with sugar. They knew that a raw tomato, though it is often as tart as a lemon, but rarely sees anyone prepare them so now.

An addition of flour to thicken the stewed tomato is seldom worth while. If something is liked, bread crumbs are better.

Baked tomatoes are good with stews or with a sauce. They may be baked, hardly more than heated through, with the tomato sauce. Prepare by washing and gnashing once or twice across the blossom end and bake in a small pan. Or they may be stuffed with a mixture of the simplest stuffing is a mixture of pulp with cracker crumbs, the mixture seasoned with pepper, salt and perhaps onion juice. More delicious stuffings, making a true stuffed tomato, are of cooked meat or chicken. A stuffed tomato with half onion filling is welcome to some tastes.

The tomato is sometimes peeled and encased in pastry, just as apple is in apple dumpling, making a tomato dumpling.

Of all the good ways of cooking the tomato, the method least used is that of stewing. The tomato is stewed in its own juice. Even the green tomato is good fried. In any case, this vegetable must not be overripe if it is to be thus treated or the slices will fall to pieces in the pan. They must be firm, and it is necessary to leave the skin on and cut them rather thick.

The further preparation of the slices depends upon the taste of the one doing the work, but the whole is operation must be quickly done or the dish or garnishment (fried tomatoes are used in both ways) will be a failure. They may be fried in butter or butter flavoured with a few drops of onion juice, with only a sprinkling of salt and pepper, or dipped in eggs and crumbs and flour, or dipped in flour without eggs. In the former case they must be turned often and taken out before they begin to break.

If a sauce is desired, the butter in the pan add a tablespoon of flour, stirring until the two for me bubbling sauce, and then add a little of this cream or milk with a pinch of soda, and stir the whole until thick and smooth, with a little salt and white pepper. The tomatoes, which have been kept hot, are then put in the sauce and the whole allowed to boil up once.

When the tomatoes are dipped in crumbs and oil, the dish seems a little more substantial and is a good one for luncheon when a street vendor's method of trying and the sauce may be the same. When dipped in flour they seem to burn on the pan more readily than otherwise, and it is quite a knack to brown them just right and not burn them.

Scalloped Tomatoes—Fresh or canned tomatoes may be used for this dish. Put alternate layers of bread or cracker crumbs with tomatoes. Season with salt and pepper, and with a little onion juice and sugar if the most pleasant flavor is desired. Put butter on top or use buttered crumbs. If canned tomatoes are used, pour on a little of the liquor; if fresh tomatoes, add a little boiling water. Layers of onions make the dish more smooth and savory. Scalloped Tomatoes and Peppers—Put in a baking dish a layer of cracker crumbs, then one of tomatoes, then one of green peppers chopped fine, and continue the layers until the dish is full. Cover with buttered crumbs and bake half an hour.

TEACHERS RETURN FROM TRIP THROUGH EUROPE

New York, Sept. 7.—The steamship, Greene, which arrived late last night from Bremen, brought 375 members of the National German-American Teachers' Association, who left New York on July 2 and have traveled through various parts of Europe, one month being spent in Germany. They were received at Caxel by the German empress. Most of the members of the association teach German in the public schools throughout the United States.
