London, Thursday, July 2.

Exit the great "I."

Premier-elect Laurier will now proceed to arrange his Ministers. He does not seem to know that the high tax journals settled his Cabinet for him ten days ago.

The new national broom will begin to sweep tomorrow.

Let it be noted that the beneficent train came as soon as the Tupper Government resigned office.

East Lambton recount sent the majority for Mr. Fraser, the successful Liberal candidate, away up. This is one of the seats which, before election day, it was stated the high tax managers were determined to have at all hazards.

The recounts, we were told, were to give Sir Charles Tupper a majority. After all the irregularities—in some cases amounting to rascalities—were turned to account, Sir Charles found himself with a shortage of over 40 in his Parliamentary following, and so, kicking against his stars to the last, he regretfully gets out.

Already there is an outcry, in certain Conservative quarters, against the retention of Sir Charles Tupper as leader of the Opposition. It is none of their business, but Liberals generally will be pleased to see him continued in the Conservative leadership.

The offensive partisan civil servant, who worked early and late to elect Tupper candidates to Parliament, is now trembling in his shoes.

So it seems that Mr. Haggart and Dr. Montague have formed themselves into a committee of two to take up a collection for a political sustentation fund. They hold that this is absolutely necessary to a proper enjoyment of life in Opposition.

Canada has had four Premiers since the death of Sir John Macdonald in 1891. Hon. Wilfrid Laurier, now summoned to form an Administration, will be the fifth. Sir John Abbott resigned. Sir John Thompson died in office. Sir Mackenzie Bowell was decapitated, according to his own statement, by a "nest of traitors"—in other words, he was betrayed and forced out of the Premiership by the men whom he had called to office, and who had solemnly pledged themselves to serve him faithfully. And now we have had Sir Charles Tupper, who was Prime Minister for less than four months, and who is compelled by the public verdict to give place to the Liberal leader.

The London Times, the leading newspaper of Great Britain, says: "Mr. Laurier comes to office with the cordial respect of political opponents as well as friends. His private record is as stainless as his personal character is engaging and attractive. He counts warm friends upon both sides in politics, and many Conservatives will be found to echo the remark once made by Sir John Macdonald with regard to him: 'I can trust Laurier without the slightest fear. He is incapable of breaking his word, even if he wished to.'"

The "nest of traitors" at Ottawa has been harried.

The desperate attack made upon the election of Mr. Macpherson, one of the new Liberals M. P.s for the city of Hamilton, has failed, and he has been declared duly elected. Thus Hamilton will have in the House of Commons two supporters of the new Administration. We congratulate the star on its choice. Messrs. Wood and Macpherson are live, experienced business men, who can be expected to make their influence felt in the re-establishing of good government in the Dominion.

Conservative editors have been inspiring false hopes in the breasts of their party readers by telling them that Sir Charles Tupper had a winning card up his sleeve which he would play and retain office. Those who put any faith in the assertion must now feel very foolish.

Now we know where we are at as a nation. Canada is all right, and the Government at Ottawa, to be formed this week, will be all right. Let us give the new managers of public affairs a fair trial.

The Governor-General seems to have had a lot of bother keeping the defeated Ministers even moderately straight. With a new captain on the ship of state, his Excellency can resume his placid pursuits with perfect equanimity.

The New-Fangled Ballot.

The Dominion Government having paid $2,500 to a good Conservative friend for the right to use his "round hole" ballot, it was probably a proper course to give the expensive "patent" a trial at the polls. The record of spoiled or irregularly marked voting papers has been very large, and the new ballot has been received with general disfavor. The British ballot is used in all elections in the motherland, in the Ontario Provincial and municipal elections, and in various other portions of the empire. It has always worked well, the number of spoiled ballots polled at elections being infinitely smaller than was the case with the new ballot. In the Hobbs-Eassey contest, in this city, for example, the rejected ballots only numbered 28 for the entire four wards which make up the city of London for Dominion election purposes. In the same wards, in the general election just held, over 300 ballots were thrown out by the deputy returning officers for one cause or another. If a ballot is wanted which is simple, and easy to understand, and that can be marked by a person possessing the most obtuse intellect without error, surely the English ballot ought to be again adopted. A plain paper, with the names of candidates clearly printed on it, each being separated by bold lines, seems to be about as serviceable a ballot as could be placed in the hands of the voter. If the name of each candidate is printed on a different colored background, the ballot might be improved, but even without that no reasons have been adduced to show that the average voter could not express his desires with greater accuracy by this voting paper than by any new-fangled substitute. There will always be a few persons who will, either by mistake or design, spoil their ballots, but we question if under any system of ballot papers yet devised there would be fewer votes thrown out than were spoiled in the last Provincial election in London, where the British ballot was in use. Twenty-eight bad ballots out of a total of over 4,000 polled is a record hard to beat.

Reminiscences of "Uncle Tom."

Some of the biographers of Harriet Beecher Stowe have made queer mistakes about Josiah Henson, the "Uncle Tom" of the story which brought the noted authoress her fame. Several writers announce that Mr. Henson died in 1871. This is an error, as he was living and voted for Hon. David Mills at the general election of 1882. Mr. Henson settled near Dresden, Ont., many years ago, and was an intelligent man, with many original qualities. Comparatively early in life, and soon after his escape to Canada, he wrote his autobiography, giving a graphic account of his life as a slave. At that time the abolitionist movement had attained great strength in the New England States, and Mr. Henson made a pilgrimage through the east, selling copies of his "Life," with the avowed object of obtaining enough money to free his brother, then a slave in Kentucky. He met with marked success, and his brother's freedom was bought. But the trip was productive of far more momentous results than was calculated on by the pilgrim. The little book fell into the hands of Harriet Beecher Stowe. She became interested in the man, and in the abolitionist movement, and entered on a series of investigations that led her to write the story, which captivated and thrilled the civilized world, and more than any other influence aided in the overthrow of slavery in the States. It was not surprising that Harriet Beecher Stowe chose Josiah Henson, the refugee in Canada, whose thrilling personal narrative had first impressed her with the iniquity of slavery, to represent her leading character, "Uncle Tom." One of the newspaper biographers told a story of Mr. Henson having been presented with a watch by Queen Victoria. The watch was really presented by Sir Fowell Buxton, on behalf of many British admirers, who met "Uncle Tom," and listened to the story of his life and work when he was in England some fifteen years ago. When Mr. Henson landed in Chatham, the Dominion customs officials requested a sight of the watch, and it was proudly produced. The timepiece was promptly seized, and held until duty had been paid upon it. Mr. Henson always regarded this as a shabby piece of business.

An unpublished anecdote of this interesting man is told by Hon. David Mills. When Mr. Henson came back from England, he told Mr. Mills that when he went to Windsor Castle to see the Queen, by royal command, her Majesty said to him, "Why, Mr. Henson, I heard that you were dead." "Yes, your Majesty," was the pawkily reply: "I heard the same thing, but don't you believe a word of it."

British army experts report that compressed food was used with advantage in the recent expedition to Ashantee. The climate did not damage the disiccated soup. A great saving in the carriage of supplies was effected by the use of these concentrated foods.

The "Mad" Dog Season

If a dog comes up to you these summer days, and begins a course of earnest barking, do not get rattled and call for a policeman to shoot him on the ground that he is mad. He may be in the possession of an important secret which he is anxious to impart. This plan was followed by a New York policeman who was on his rounds the other night, when a big bulldog came up and barked at him—not angrily, and accompanied by vigorous tail-wagging. "What is the matter?" asked the policeman. The dog barked away to a neighboring stone yard, and the policeman followed. There the officer found a healthy, new-born infant, wrapped in muslin. The dog accompanied the policeman and the infant to the police station, and after seeing his charge safely lodged there, went off apparently satisfied that he had fulfilled his mission.

NOTED WEDDINGS.

The Wealthiest Woman in Canada Married at Toronto.

Toronto, July 2.—Mrs. Alexander Cameron, probably the wealthiest lady in Canada, was married yesterday at her residence on Carleton street to Capt. John Morrow, of Montreal, formerly of this city. The ceremony was performed by Bishop Dumoulin. The wedding was private, only a few intimate friends being present. This is Mrs. Cameron's third marriage. Her first husband was Mr. Ward, a shipowner, of Detroit, and her second husband, Mr. Alexander Cameron, of Toronto, who died a couple of years ago. A daughter of Mrs. Cameron by her first husband is known as Princess De Chimay, having married an Italian nobleman.

Mrs. Cameron's first husband was a millionaire lumberman, of Detroit, and, though his estate is still in costly litigation, Mrs. Cameron has in her possession $4,000,000 of Mr. Ward's wealth.

ANOTHER.

Holy Trinity Church never held a bigger crowd than it did yesterday afternoon, when the marriage of George W. Allan, son of Hon. Geo. W. Allan, of Moss Park, a leading lawyer of Winnipeg, and Miss Mariel Wragge, daughter of Edmund Wragge, local superintendent of the Grand Trunk Railway system, was celebrated. Bingham Allan, brother of the groom, a shipman, and the bride was attended by six young ladies. The officiating clergyman was the rector of the church, the Rev. John Pearson, LL.D., assisted by Rev. Edward Cayley, of Trinity University, Strathallan, Lake, Simcoe, will be the rendezvous of the couple for the summer, after which they will reside in Winnipeg.

There is ease for those far gone in consumption—not recovery—ease. There is cure for those not far gone. There is prevention for those who are threatened.
