The Oueen's Veil.

A little tremulous sob broke from Tina's lips as she also turned and disappeared within the lace manufactory.

A figure stole from behind the trunk of a tree that overshadowed the building as the door closed after her, and then stood still in the glare of the lamp, and peered down the street af-ter the retreating form of Ernest Hol-

The figure was that of Barbara Beza; but her yellow, wrinkled face was almost convulsed with pain, and almost ghastly in its pallor.

"I should know one of that race any where," she muttered, in a shaking voice. "What is he doing here, and what can he want of my gentle little dove? I told her she was too pretty to be working for her living, and it seems that more than I have discov-ered the fact. But Barbara Beza is her friend, and she will see to it that no harm befalls her, if it is in her power to avert it.

Lord Holborn, with his sister, mother and friend, left Brussels the next day; and Tina resumed her duties in the manufactory of Monsieur La Fort. The design for the wonderful lace was at last completed, and, having been copied upon cloth to be reserved for exhibition, the holes were pricked in the parchment, which was divided into sections, and given to the experienced lace-makers, who were deemed fitted to work upon it.

One day, on opening his mail, Monsieur La Fort found one letter which seemed to throw him into a state of great excitement.

The princess and some friends are coming to see the design for the royal veil," she said to Tina, a little while after, when he had recovered something of his usual composure. 'When will they come, Monsieur?"

she had asked, in a low, constrained tone, and her voice sounded so strangely that he turned round in his chair to look at her.
"Tomorrow at three," he replied, and watched her narrowly to see the effect of his words. She made no answer, but he noticed that she gave a sudden gasp, as if something had pained or oppressed her, and then she tried to resume her When the royal visitors called, according to appointment, Tina was not present to exhibit the designs. A sudden illness confined her to her room. The princess was charmed with the delicate and artistic work, and earnestly said to the proprietor of the establishment:

"Monsieur, I am in ecstasies! These lilies and tiny rock ferns, surrounding the royal crest, are my favorites in nature. How strange that I should find them woven into my wedding-veil! Did Monsieur design it himself?" "No, your royal highness, it done by a young woman—a mere girl —in my employ," Monsieur La Fort answered, much pleased by her gracious praise.

The princess expressed a desire to see her, but on being informed that the young artist was ill, she took from her finger a beautiful ring, which she placed in Monsieur La Fort's hand, with the request that he present it to the gifted young artist, as a token of the donor's appreciation of her rare skill. It was a diamond encircled with her Monsieur La Fort dilated upon the princess' delight at the beauty of the design for the veil, and told of her surprise and pleasure at discovering her favorite flowers among the collection; and as he spoke of her praise and thanks to Tina herself, and gave her the beautiful token that she had left for her, he watched to see if those sweet brown eves would brighten with pleasure, or her lips relax with a smile of appreciation.

But she only seemed to grow paler and more sad. The hand that she held out to receive the princess' gift trembled vis-ibly, and as it touched her palm, her fingers closed over it convulsively; then, with no other warning than a moan of pain, she sank back in her shair in a dead faint.

CHAPTER XII.

Several eventful weeks went by after the incidents recorded in the preceding

Tina recovered almost immediately from her illness, which, in spite of Monsieur's anxiety for a number of days afterward, she declared was nothing which need cause any one any

She resumed her accustomed place and work, which was now the fashtoning of those most delicate portions of her design, Madame Fouchard, in her jealousy had declared could never be wrought.

As the days passed, Tina became aware that Monsieur La Fort's attentions had become quite marked. He was her constant companion, consulted her upon every possible occasion in regard to the business, daily made her a present of a fresh bouquet of which he placed in a silver vase on her table, and one day crowned his devotion by asking her to be

On the following day monsieur met her as if nothing had occurred—was as gallant and attentive as ever, and she felt quite relieved, and believed that he had accepted her refusal as final, and would trouble her no more. And so several weeks went by; the wedding finery progressed satisfactor-fly, and those graceful sprays of lilies, which had so offended Madame Fou-chard and aroused her jealousy, and which Tina had reserved as her own especial share of the work, increased rapidly; for she had found among the workwomen one whom she thought she could trust to assist her, and who, with some instruction, might be able to carry on the work alone, if anything should happen to prevent her re-maining until the veil was completed.

And something did happen.

Madame Fouchard had never ceased to regard her with the most bitter animosity, and from the day monsieur had informed her that Tina would, in a measure, supersede she had been determined to do her utmost to injure her, that she might prove to her master that she had prophesied truly with reference to

A few days later, a fine pair of needle-point cuffs disappeared also, and, of course, Mademoiselle Julie could not be blamed this time.

Monsieur La Fort became furious, and ordered every girl into his pres-

They came frightened and trembling, for he was a terror to them all when But he could elicit no information from any of them, and every trunk, box and bag in the pension was searched, with the same result.

The cuffs were charged to the profit and loss account, and Monsieur La Fort, more disturbed than he had been for years, vowed that if any-thing else was missing, he would surely nail the culprit.

He kept a sharp eye out after this, but not so sharp but that several yards of Valenciennes soon followed the other missing articles.

Again every trunk, nook and corner was ransacked, but all to no purpose. Through it all, monsieur had not seemed to entertain a suspicion of Tina. She still occupied her place in his office, which she scarcely ever left, except for a walk now and then, or to go to her meals.

When the trunks were searched she had unhesitatingly given up the key to her tiny one, and seemed almost as anxious and troubled over the affair as monsieur himself, and his thoughts never once turned to her.

"No," he returned with an angry scowl; "but I will know yet, and. lieve me, nothing more will be lost." That night another piece of his best seedle-point took to itself wings and "A hundred francs to the one who will discover the thief," he cried in despair, when he discovered the fact. At this rate he would soon become poor man. Madame Fouchard's victous black eyes snapped as she heard this. The hundred francs are mine, and that hussy goes to prison!" she mut-tered to herself.

SUSPECTED KIDNAPPER

Arrested at Fort Dodge, lowa-Had a Pile of Gold in His Possession.

Fort Dodge, Ia., Dec. 26 .- D. Allie, of Omaha, loaded with a large amount of gold coin, for the possession of which ne can give no samsfactory explanation, is under arrest in this city on suspicion that he is one of the kidnapers of Edward Cudahy, jun. He has been identified as a former employe of the Cudahy Packing Company at South Omaha, and the Omaha police have sent urgent messages insisting that he be detained until they can investigate his movements.

Allie got off an Illinois Central train at Midnight, Thursday, having left Omaha at 7:50 o'clock. He claimed to have been injured while attempting to pass between two seats in the car, and pretended to be suffering great pain. He went to Station Agent Frantz, who sent him to the General Hospital and notified the company's surgeon here. His actions were suspicious from the start, and the doctor made a thorough examination of the man. He could find no injuries such as would necessitate treatment.

The result of the investigation was that the Illinois Central Radiroad re-fused to have anything to do with the case, and the hospital closed its doors on him. On examination by one of the nurses it was found that the man had, in different pockets, several thousand dollars in gold and bills. Alle refused to tell where he got the money.

IS DERANGED

There Is Sallow Complexion, Full ness About the at mach and Pains in the Shoulders and Pack -Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver P.lls Act Promptly and Directly on the

By a careful consideration of the following symptoms you can decide for yourself if your liver is torpid or inactive. The liver is the largest or-gan connected with the digestive system, and as a filterer of bile from the blood is to a very large extent respon-sible for the health of the whole body. A sense of fullness and oppression about the stomach, a pale, sailow com-plexion and pain in the shoulders and back are among the first indications of a disordered liver. Then there comes indigestion, wind the stomach, headache, coated tongue, a bitter taste in the mouth, depression of spirits and despondency. The bowels become irregular, and constination and looseness alternate. The bile left in the blood by an inactive liver poisons the blood and causes liver spots, blotches and pimples. So great is the influence of the liver over the health of other organs that physicians have called the liver the governor or controller of the body. The prescription from which Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are prepared was perfected by the doctor in his immense practice, and has proven the greatest liver regulator ever discovered. It acts directly and promptly on the liver, making it active and ous as a filtering organ. At the same time it regulates and tones up the kidneys and bowels and sets the whole filtering and excretory system in healthy working order.

Notwithstanding the fame of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills throughout this continent, you will never fully realize and appreciate their value until you have actually used them, and only then can you fully understand why they have such an enormous sale.
