HAY SCARCITY BECOMING SERIOUS

Demand Is Increasing Daily, But the Supply Is Falling Off.

OATS ARE ALSO SCARCE

But Buyers Must Have Them and Must Pay Any Price That Is Asked—Market Quotations.

The scarcity of hay on the local market is becoming a very serious matter now. The demand is increasing daily, but instead of the supply increasing on the small amount that has been offered in the past few weeks, there is a steady falling off. This morning there were only four or five loads, and these of poor quality. Despite this fact, however, they sold at from $12.50 to $14, the majority going at the latter figure.

When these loads, that would formerly have had to go begging for a buyer, can command such prices, it is evident that the demand has reached a very critical stage.

Oats Are Scarce.

Oats, too, are somewhat in the same condition. There were only a couple of loads offered today, which sold at $1.50 and $1.52, a very good price for new oats, and at that one of these loads had been ordered long ahead. The time has come now when those needing hay and oats need it badly, as their supply is practically exhausted, and it will have to be procured from somewhere. If it cannot be had on the local market, it will have to be sought elsewhere.

The market, save for these few loads, practically did not exist this morning. Other prices remain as follows:
