Much of the argument in favor of the grants was based on the erroneous idea that the Crown under the Civil List Acts from George I. onwards surrendered its private property in exchange for a civil list. Neither George 1. nor his successors, Mr. Bradlaugh declared, surrendered anything. The present royal family never surrendered anything of a farthing's value to the country. The Committee of Inquiry had elicited the fact that during the present reign the savings upon certain classes under the Civil List Act, instead of being applied to defray the charges of other classes, had been handed to the Queen without the J. Edmondson's stock-in-trade. He was authority of Parliament and in oreacn also served with a criminal subpœna to A Paris despatch says:—Gen. Boulanger of the statute. Right Hon. W. H. Mr. Bradlaugh had questioned the title of the Crown to its estates, but successive Parliaments had recognized, and none of the greatest lawyers had ever yet challenged the Crown's title. He reminded the House that Sir Henry F. Pon-sonby, Her Majesty's private secretary a few years ago, denied the reports that the Queen was making immense investments in ground rents, and stated that she had not £1,000,000 to invest in 2,000 persons present, including a large anything. > Acting Mayor McMillan took the chair at a mass meeting of citizens held to-night, when the recent action of the C. P. R. in seeking to expropriate the water front was condemned by the passage of some important resolutions. The principal one was:-That it is imperative, before any further land is expropriated for railway purposes or any alleged or proposed agreements are ratified, that such a permanent solution of the whole esplanade problem be arrived at as will ensure to all safe and easy access to the water front, and to the municipality the unfettered power to afford entrance and necessary facilities to all carriers by land or water now or hereafter seeking such entrance." This resolution, as also one proposing that a viaduct along the front of the city should take the place of the present level crossing so dangerous to life; and another appointing a committee to carry out the arrangements for laying the city's case before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, was unanimously adopted. Toronto is thus pledged to endeavor to retain the wharves as city property, and to improve the railway accommodation by building a viaduct.

The heavy east wind that blew this afternoon raised a big sea on the lake, and made things very lively for passengers on incoming steamers, all of whom were very sick. Several of the boats were late, but
