The News-Advertiser tells us that the right to exercise discretion as to granting applications for the pur chase of land was practically a dead letter under the late government. This is not the case. Our contemporary says that in practice every application, except for reserved lands, was allowed. What says the law on this point? It will be found in sub-section 3 of section 29 of the Crown Lands act, which reads

The Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works after examination of the report of the survey, the field notes thereof, with the statutory declaration of the surveyor, and all other documents and information in relation to the application if satisfied with the information and that it is not contrary to the public interes that the sale should be made (but no otherwise) shall name the price, based upon the classification provided for in the preceding sub-section, at which the land applied for may be sold to the applicant, and thereupon, but no sooner, the sale may be allowed to proceed.
