A GREAT MANY PEOPLE READ NOVELS

Every novel reader, who would like to study the ethics of novel writing, should read Mr. Marion Crawford's very brilliant sketch of "The Novel and What It Is." Mr. Crawford has a high opinion of the good work a novel may do. It may "educate the taste," "cultivate the intelligence," and, under the hand of genius, "purify the heart and fortify the mind." He calls the novel "an intellectual artistic luxury," intended for the "amusement or instruction of its reader," and says he is trying, in his sphere as a writer, "to make little pocket theatres out of words." Handy pocket form, cloth, 75 cents, postpaid.
