

THE SAGUENAY

LAKE ST. JOSEPH, P.Q. From Montreal, 198.1 Miles.
From Quebec, 22 Miles.

Less than an hour's run from Quebec on the shore of this beautiful sheet of water, is Lake St. Joseph Hotel. Were it not for the great lure of the speckled beauties further north the fisherman might be tempted to spend his whole summer in this lovely spot, surrounded by mountains clad with magnificent hard wood bush.

This hotel is patronized by a lot of nice people throughout the season. To the fisherman who appreciates the social side of an outing, it is an added advantage.

The Quebec and Lake St. John Division trains run into the Hotel Station during the summer. The service to and from Quebec is rapid and frequent.

While the fishing here is hardly to be compared with many of the lakes and streams further up the line, in a less prodigal country it would be called good. There are speckled trout, lake trout and bass, good catches are the order of the day. The lake or fork-tailed trout called locally "touladi," is caught throughout the season by trolling in the deep water; these trout attain great size and have been taken up to thirty pounds.

LAKE EDWARD, P.Q. From Montreal, 288.0 Miles.
From Quebec, 111.9 Miles.

North of Quebec near the height of land, 1,200 feet above sea level, is Lake Edward, the largest body of water between the St. Lawrence and Lake St. John. Its original and very appropriate name was Lac des Grand Iles, for there are numerous and beautiful islands all finely wooded to be seen throughout the chain. The main lake is twenty miles long. The Laurentide House at Lake Edward is the best place along the line for outside sportsmen. The proprietor, Robert Rowley, has over three hundred square miles of the best preserves in the whole district and he maintains a splendidly organized corps of guides, undoubtedly the best available, and his head guides are employed by him the year round to retain their services.

In addition to the hotels and cottages at the station, there are twelve well equipped camps, some of them with open fireplaces, and many conveniences such as bathrooms. The camps are of different sizes and accommodate from two to ten people, but no two parties are put into the same camp. The trout fishing here is not excelled, and for the hunter, moose, caribou, and partridges; for the canoeist a territory that he could not cover in months of travel. The camps on the smaller lakes are all easily reached, the carries being short and well made, women and children can go through them as easily as men.

The trout taken in this district are the speckled brook
