

history almost ever since he was a student at Gottingen. The re-issue of the work, so that each part should be what his later opinion approved, can hardly be more satisfactory to the venerable historian than it is to the generation which first approaches his great work in the final forms of its literary execution. In this final revision Mr. Bancroft has not only corrected all mistakes and errors of fact, so far as they have been ascertained, but has revised the style, taken the wind out of pompous sentences, and brought the whole work within the laws of good writing and within the unity of plan with which he had set out at the beginning. Thus far he has removed many of the objections which stood against his history as a work of permanent value; and there is a certain solid, thorough, substantial character to his great history which gives it a permanent weight in the world of letters. The work now takes rank with the best histories of the school of philosophical narrative to which the author belongs,"—Boston Herald.

"The marvelous industry and the earnest conscientiousness which the venerable historian exhibits in revising, recasting, and in part rewriting the great work of his life, not only compel respect and admiration on their own account, but they become also the strongest guarantees of the accuracy of his scholarship, of his fidelity to truth, of the exalted conception which he entertains of his task, and therefore of the substantial excellence of his history. The edition of 1876 exhibited no little pruning and correction; but the author has again gone over the entire field, and, with a care and devotion worthy of the theme and of his reputation, has wrought what he says must be his last revision. This latest edition will be sought by many who have for years been familiar with its predecessors. The publishers deserve credit for presenting so great a work in such excellent guise, and the author may accept it as a noble monument to perpetuate his fame. But may he be spared to add many chapters to his history, and bring it down to a later period!"—Utica (N. Y.) Herald.
